INTRODUCTION.

To the Class of Eighty-five:

Again it becomes the pleasant duty of your secretary to spread before you his triennial collection of personal sketches and a general history of the class for the past three years. This period has been of much moment to Eighty-five, the professional men have followed their business brethren in settling down into their places for their chosen life-work, and now at the end of seven years since graduation the real life of the class takes shape and it is possible at last to know where to put a finger on the great part of us.

We are still young; to most the greater part of life is still before us. Ours is the vigor, the spirit, and the ability to accomplish, — of the young horse, fresh broken to harness. The playful friskiness of youth and of the untamed colt is gone, but the strength of the man is now in us. We are anxious to do much, to be much to the world, and, as we feel for the first time our new responsibilities and the world's formalities, like the horse's harness upon us, we are apt to be impatient of their restraint, and to cast longing glances backward at the old freedom of college days and life together in Cambridge. But such glances are but momentary; our faces are really to the front. The restraints, the burdens, are soon as natural as the old freedom, and he who bursts the bonds, be he not a Pegasus soaring above earthly things, is but a mad runaway who wrecks his burden and destroys himself. May our records be free from such!

The necrology to be told is the sad part of the secretary's duty in class reports. Well-known faces have been taken from us in these three short years, and the class misses Allen, Bridge, Briggs, Hobbs, W. W. Smith, and Tylor among the graduates, and Corey, Frye, Richards, and Urner among the non-graduates.

That most noteworthy event in University life, the birth of the "Harvard Graduates' Magazine" and the appearance of its first number with an excellent sketch of Harvard up to date (which has been sent to all of you), makes unnecessary any mention of college history in this report, and that feature of the last report has therefore been omitted. The management of the magazine hope for and deserve encouragement, not only in the way of many subscriptions, but with news for the special class columns, and broader contributions on University topics. The class secretaries are lending their aid, and the University itself has set the seal of its especial approval upon the enterprise by the appointment of a University editor. In this connection it may not be out of place for your secretary to disclaim all responsibility for the error contained in the October number of that magazine, of placing the record of William A. Chanler of '91, the African explorer, among the notes from our class.

A class secretary cannot conscientiously address his class-mates without the customary growl. There is always something in each class to be growled at, and Eighty-five is no exception to the rule. Two short growls will be enough, however, if heeded. Growl number one is aimed at the delinquents who cause delay in bringing out the report by their failures to answer repeated calls for replies to requests for information. The average of prompt replies to first, or, at most, second, requests was good, however. Growl number two is aimed at certain delinquents who are fully able but have not yet made good their subscriptions to the class fund. Our class fund is small, is being carefully looked after, but will never grow to be fully self-supporting unless it receives all the aid promised at its inception.

Faithfully yours,

HENRY M. WILLIAMS.

RECORD OF THE CLASS.

1888–1892.

VICTOR CLIFTON ALDERSON.

Is still helping to educate the youth of Illinois, being now at the head of the Englewood High School of Chicago. Was married on July 3, 1888, at Richmond, Ind., to Harriett E. Thomas, daughter of George S. and Elizabeth Thomas. Is a member of the Harvard Club of Chicago and a fellow of the Geological Society of America, and secretary of the Geological Society of Chicago.

RICHARD ALDRICH.

"I came home from Europe about January 1, 1888. Went back on 'Providence Journal' as general and editorial writer and musical critic. When Senator Dixon was elected he took me to Washington as his secretary, where I spent a most enjoyable sixteen months (51st Congress). Besides regular duties, I did the musical criticism for the 'Washington Evening Star.' When Congress adjourned I secured a position on 'The New York Tribune' as a reporter, taking general assignments. In about six weeks I was promoted to the night editor's room, editing telegraph, which place I now hold, besides which I have frequently been called on to assist Mr. Krehbiel, the musical critic of 'The Tribune.'"

ARTHUR LINCOLN ALLEN.*

Was born in West Cambridge (now Arlington), in Massachusetts, on the 28th day of September, 1863. He was the eldest of the five children of William H. and Anna L. (Ramsdell) Allen. His father, the son of Abbott Allen, a native of Arlington, is one of the most prosperous farmers in Arlington, and occupies an honorable and prominent position in church and town affairs, and has always taken an active interest in the welfare of his town, having served as a member of the school committee and as selectman. His mother, the daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth M. (Peirce) Ramsdell, was a woman of a most estimable character, and a descendant of one of the oldest families in Arlington.

He had as his inheritance a sound, though not a robust, constitution, and a mind of more than ordinary acuteness. His home influences were of the best, and as a child he received a careful home training. At an early age he entered the public schools of his native town, and, after graduating from the Russell Grammar School, entered the Cotting High School, from which he received his diploma in the summer of 1880. It was early recognized that his mind was superior to those around him, and his parents determined to gratify his ambitious desire for a higher education by sending him to Harvard College. He had been a careful and painstaking scholar, but in order that he might be fully prepared for his entrance examinations, it was thought best that he should remain another year at the High School, and under the instruction of that strict disciplinarian, Charles M. Clay, now the headmaster of the Roxbury High School, he received a most thorough training in classics and mathematics, and an excellent preparation for Harvard College. In the fall of 1881, at the age of eighteen years, he entered Harvard College with the class of 1885, thoroughly qualified to take high rank among his classmates. From that date our acquaintance with him began, and we remember him as an amiable, kind-hearted fellow, always fond of recreation and ready for a good time, but not inclined to over-exert himself in his studies or to zealously seek the companionship of his books. While, therefore, he did not take that rank in his class to which his ability and previous training entitled him, yet in those college days he acquired that happy faculty of mastering a subject quickly, and a knowledge of men and affairs which was destined to be of much benefit to him in later life.

He graduated with us in June, 1885, and in the fall of that year entered the Harvard Law School, pursuing the full three years' course, and graduating in June, 1888. In the meantime, however, in January, 1888, he had been admitted to the Suffolk Bar, and was thus fully prepared upon receiving his degree from the Law School to enter upon the active practice of his profession. Soon after his graduation, he became a law clerk in the office of Messrs. Shattuck & Munroe, in Boston, and remained with them about one year. In the spring of 1889, thinking that a banking business might be more lucrative and more congenial, he took an extended trip through Texas and other Southwestern States, with an idea of establishing a bank in the Southwest; but the outlook was not encouraging, and, upon his return to Boston, he opened a law office in the Fiske Building, on State street. Life became to him more real and earnest, and his natural ability was given an opportunity to assert itself. He entered upon the practice of his profession with zeal and earnestness, and his sound judgment and close application soon gained for him a steadily increasing business. That happy and genial disposition, however, so characteristic of him in his college days, still remained, and made for him many warm and true friends and an ever-increasing circle of acquaintances.

On October 13, 1891, he married Bertha C. Partridge, in Gardiner, Me., but he continued to reside in Arlington, making his home with his father in the house in which he had lived from childhood. After but a few months of a most happy union, his life, which promised to be one of success and usefulness, was suddenly brought to a close. His sickness, of a little more than two weeks, which was most painful, he bore with patience and fortitude; but he died peacefully at the last, on May 16, 1892. His widow survives him, and seeks consolation for her grief in the blessing vouchsafed to her in the birth of a daughter on August 1, 1892. To his father and immediate relatives, who had always relied upon his sound judgment for assistance in their perplexities, his death was the more sad; for to them he was the eldest child, and above all the rest best fitted by education and natural ability to give wise counsel and advice.

Naturally of a retiring disposition, though genial and kind-hearted, his circle of college friends or even acquaintances was small. While he enjoyed to the utmost the companionship of his classmates, he preferred the friendship of a few rather than the acquaintance of the many. But his circle of immediate friends found him ever a true and loyal companion and a warm-hearted friend. He was fond of athletic exercise, and, while he took no active part in college sports, he was always an admirer and deeply interested spectator of the college contests; and this fondness for athletics he retained in later life, being at his death a prominent member of the Arlington Boat Club. His life was one of happiness and hope, full of anticipation and trust in the future; and just in the bloom of youth, when the future had seemed so full of promise, death ended all.

W. M. M.

HORACE DAVID ARNOLD.

"January 1, 1888, found me in the midst of the third year of the Harvard Medical School. In July of that year I entered the Boston City Hospital as surgical house-officer. After finishing that service, of eighteen months, I served four months at the Boston Lying-in Hospital. Then followed a month spent in visiting hospitals in other Eastern cities, after which I returned to accept the position of assistant superintendent at the Boston City Hospital. I have nearly completed two years in this position, and expect soon to settle down to the regular practice of medicine apart from institutions." Was married, June 8, 1892, at Waltham, Mass.

CHARLES HEATH ATKINSON.

Is out of health. No report.

CLARENCE WALTER AYER.

"I have continued, since 1888, my residence in Cambridge, as a private tutor of English and college-preparatory work; as a student of English, and of Germanic and Romance Philology in the Harvard Graduate School; and as an assistant, by a late appointment last fall, in the English department." Received the degree of A.M. Harvard in 1888. Is a member of the Graduate Club, Harvard.

WILLIAM FRANCIS BACON.

"Graduated from Harvard Law School in June, 1889, and have since the fall of that year practised law in Boston." Received the degree of A.M. Harvard, 1889. June 17, 1891, was married at Newton, Mass., to Bessie Ewing Sayford, daughter of Samuel M. and Clarissa K. Sayford. Is a member of the law fraternity Φ.Δ.Φ.

STEPHEN ARNOLD BAILEY.

"After completing the course of study in the Harvard Law School, in 1889, I came almost immediately to Telluride, San Miguel County, Col., where I entered the employment of Mr. L. L. Nunn, an attorney, banker, manager of mining corporations, and a former student at the Harvard Law School. Telluride is a mining town with a population of about 2,500, situated in a beautiful and picturesque valley, nestling in the heart of the Rocky Mountains at an altitude of 8,500 feet above sea-level. The nearest railroad station in 1889 was 45 miles distant, on a branch of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad. In 1890, however, the increasing importance of this district led to the construction of the Rio Grande Southern Railroad from Ridgway on the former road, by way of Telluride and Rico to Durango. Mr. Nunn's legal and mining business, already large when I first came to him, has been growing rapidly ever since. Have been to Boston three times since I came to Telluride, and during the winter of 1890–91 I made an extensive tour through California and Mexico. I have just returned to Telluride from a trip to Europe, which I made this summer in company with Mr. Nunn."

WILLIAM HENRY BALDWIN, Jr.

"With the Union Pacific Railway Company until June 1, 1891, in various positions, and latterly assistant vice-president of that company. June 1, 1891, resigned to take present position as General Manager, Flint & Pere Marquette Railroad Company and Steamship Lines; headquarters, Saginaw, Mich. Married October 30, 1889, Ruth Standish Bowles, of Springfield, Mass. Have daughter Ruth Standish, and son W. H., 3d." Is a member of the East Saginaw and Detroit Clubs of those cities respectively.

HENRY BARTLETT.

Has returned from his position on the Philadelphia, Wilmington, & Baltimore Railroad to accept the office of assistant superintendent of motive power on the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, his old employers. On October 28, 1891, was married at Lowell, Mass., to Alice Maud Moulton, daughter of Oliver H. and Miranda O. Moulton.

STEPHEN SMITH BARTLETT.

"Since graduation from the Harvard Law School in June, 1889, I have practised law in Boston." Is a member of the Puritan Club of Boston, the Newton Boat Club, and of the law fraternity Φ.Δ.Φ.

FERDINAND WINTHROP BATCHELDER.

Has changed his business from insurance to chemicals and chemical compounds, being the treasurer of the Boston Chemical Company. Resides in Weston, where a daughter, Elizabeth, was born December 10, 1890.

LORING WOART BATTEN.

"At the above date I was Rector of St. George's Church, Philadelphia, and a pro tempore instructor in Hebrew in the Protestant Episcopal Divinity School of Philadelphia. In June, 1890, I was elected instructor of the new department of the English Bible, and September 29, 1891, was elected Professor of the Old Testament Language and Literature in the same institution, and took up the duties of that chair at once. My duties in the school required me to give up my parish, and I am now devoting all my time and energy to the cause of biblical education. I am also engaged in summer instruction at Chautauqua and other schools, under the direction of the American Institute of Sacred Literature." A daughter, Margaret Deland Batten, was born July, 1889, and a son, L. W., Jr., September 29, 1890. Is a member of the Union League Club of Philadelphia and of the Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis.

HARRY CLAYTON BEAMAN.

"Spent the winter of 1888–89 in Chillicothe, Ohio, and a part of winter of 1891–92, previous to a southern trip to New Orleans and Florida. Have no reason for complaint at the way the world has used me since leaving college. Have learned that a man is lucky if he can simply keep alive." Has two sons, Harry Clayton, Jr., born November 10, 1888, at Chillicothe, Ohio, and Bartlett, born July 20, 1891, at Princeton, Mass., where our classmate is in the summer hotel business. He is a member of the Worcester Athletic Club and of the Young Men's Democratic Club of Massachusetts.

JOHN WHEELER BEMIS.

"Have done practically nothing since the last report." Has spent a large part of the past three years in Paris studying his chosen profession of architecture at the Beaux Arts. Returned home about a year ago. Is a member of the St. Botolph Club, Boston.

ROBERT SLOAN BICKFORD.

"Have lived in Boston during the last five years, teaching in the private school of R. & R. S. Bickford. For the last two and a half years have also been with the firm of S. P. Cushing & Co., Boston, makers of electrical and scientific instruments, as general manager." Is secretary of Harvard Graduate Club of the Delta Upsilon fraternity, and secretary of the New England Delta Upsilon Club.

FRANKLIN SWIFT BILLINGS.

"I have continued in the Brazil trade as a member of the firm of Swift, Billings, & Co., of New York, and have also during the past two years been interested in lands and buildings in West Superior, Wis. I have travelled a good deal in this country, and each year spent a few weeks at the Parmachenee Club, Maine, in shooting and fishing." Was married on July 12, 1892, at Woodstock, Vt., to Bessie H. Vail. Is a member of the University Club of New York, of the Superior Club of West Superior, Wis., and of the Parmachenee Club of Maine.

CHARLES WESLEY BIRTWELL.

"I have continued in the service of the Boston Children's Aid Society. In 1891 I spent four months in England and France, studying social conditions, charities, industrial education, etc." Is a member of the Colonial Club of Cambridge, the Channing Club, and Massachusetts Library Club, and of various associations in the line of his chosen work, in the counsels of which he takes a prominent part.

GEORGE RICHARD BLINN.

"Since January 1, 1888, I have continued my experiment of practising law in Boston."

ABNER ZAZA BOWEN.

Is now in Chicago. "Admitted to the bar, 1889. Summer of 1892 in Europe. No further report."

FRANK JOSIAH BOWMAN.

Is still practising law at Sterling, Ill.

ROLAND WILLIAM BOYDEN.

"I graduated at the Harvard Law School in 1888. Since then I have practised law, for a year in the office of Henry P. Moulton, Salem, Mass., for nearly two years in the office of H. W. Chaplin, Boston. I am now in partnership with Charles I. Giddings, H.U. 1887, at 512 Exchange Building, Boston." Is a member of the Boston Athletic Association.

CARLETON BRABROOK.

"Was graduated from Columbia College Law School May 22, 1890, and was admitted to the New York Bar April 2, 1891.

Since that time have been employed at Reed and Barton's, Taunton." Is a member of the Winthrop Club of Taunton.

*MARTIN LUTHER BRADFORD, Jr.

Born November 6, 1861, in Dorchester (now Boston), Mass. Died June 27, 1887, at Boston.

See Report II., page 17.

CHARLES FRANKLIN BRANDT.

Lawyer, 140 Nassau Street, New York City.

*WILLIAM FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Was born in Dublin, N.H., January 12, 1861; took the preparatory course at Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio; graduated from the University of Cincinnati in 1884, having worked during his entire college course in the Mercantile Library of that city; and in September, 1884, joined the class of '85 in Harvard College. Owing to mistaken advice, he failed to follow his natural bent of study, and was enrolled in advanced and difficult courses in subjects for which he had no taste. This annoying position, and occasional ill health, resulted in his not receiving his degree with his class. The next year he followed his natural tendencies and achieved distinguished success in English courses, receiving in 1886 the degree of A.B. as of the class of '85. In the autumn of that year ill health compelled him to abandon projected graduate work, and he returned home to Foster's, Ohio. There he continued his Chaucer studies, despite constantly declining health, till within twenty-four hours of his death, which occurred May 21, 1890.

A great feature of Bridge's character was generosity. For the shortcomings of others he had always charity, forgiveness for detractors, and enthusiasm for noble men and causes. His was not an aggressive nature; for this would have ill suited his native kindliness. Remarkably quick-witted, he easily gained insight into his favorite studies; and this, with the enthusiasm of his gratified tastes, would doubtless have led to valuable results, but for an untimely death.

His most characteristic quality, however, was cheerfulness. Though racked with pain, keenly feeling the false position in which he had been placed by failure at first to obtain his degree, and burdened by work and cares, he displayed a gladness and brightness which to those not knowing him well seemed almost levity; but his friends understood the expanding of a soul as inclined to joy as a flower to light; a soul to which a feeling of discontent or gloom seemed an impossibility. It is thus — with his charity, frankness, and cheerfulness — that his friends will preserve the memory of a life all too soon ended.

A. G. H.

*FREDERICK HARRIS BRIGGS.

Frederick Harris Briggs died of pneumonia in New York City, October 6, 1890. Mr. Briggs came to New York the April preceding his death with the intention of seeking employment there on one of the illustrated papers; but his constitution was already shattered by protracted ill health, and before he could gain sufficient strength actively to resume his profession, he was attacked by the malady which ended his life. The intelligence of his death came as a severe shock to those who knew him best, and who awaited with confidence the fulfilment of that promise as an artist which he displayed to us, during his college days, in the pages of the "Lampoon."

As a caricaturist, Mr. Briggs was certainly the most talented of the men of his time at Harvard. He drew familiar faces with humor, and many of us, doubtless, still have in our possession his ingenious likenesses of John the Orange-man, Oscar Wilde, Henry Irving, Langtry, Theo, and of several members of the Faculty. We must all remember with pleasure the double-page cartoons of Mr. Briggs. Collectively they would form almost a pictorial history of the significant events of our day, and we will particularly recall his treatment of the French opera, which we all went wild over, the return of our victorious ball-team, and the first outrages committed by the Athletic Committee.

The life of Mr. Briggs was not eventful, but, the writer has been told by one who knew him better than any one else, singularly happy. He was born in Springfield, July 13, 1862, the son of Albert Dwight Briggs, a civil engineer, and later, one of the Massachusetts Railroad Commissioners, and of Caroline Clapp Briggs. He received his early education at private schools in Springfield, and fitted for college at Adams Academy, in Quincy, Mass. His father died before he came to college.

The circle of Mr. Briggs' acquaintances in Cambridge was not large, but the few who enjoyed the privilege of knowing him well, always found in him a most agreeable and interesting companion. He possessed a memory of rare retentiveness, remarkable critical acumen in matters pertaining to art, and, for so young a man, a profound knowledge of the world. Unusually gifted as he was, vanity had no place in his character, and he showed for the work of other men, whom a less generous nature might have regarded as rivals, the keenest and heartiest appreciation. Mr. Briggs was not a hard student, but it seemed to the writer as if he remembered every line that he read in books, and this would not be quite incredible of one who could come away from an evening at the opera with a good part of the score, words, and music, in his head.

Socially, Mr. Briggs was in the main affiliated with the members of the "Lampoon" board. He drew continuously for the "Lampoon," from the third number that appeared after his entrance into college to the very last issue of the paper in his senior year. He also belonged to the Hasty Pudding Club, for which society he painted the excellent play-bill, commemorating '85's performance of Joan of Arc, which now occupies a conspicuous place on the walls of the new theatre.

After leaving college Mr. Briggs remained for a year at home in Springfield. He was then persuaded to go to San Francisco, where he assumed charge of the pictorial department of the "Daily Examiner." For this work he displayed extraordinary aptitude, and the many hundreds of cuts which he produced while in the "Examiner's" employ were uniformly excellent. But the work of newspaper artists is for the main part drudgery, the limitations within which they must labor are obviously restricted, and Mr. Briggs, becoming at last impatient of the narrowness of the newspaper field, determined to return East, hoping to find more congenial employment in New York. His health, however, had been much impaired by an attack of the grip, which left him nervously and physically exhausted, and, as it befell, he came back home only to lay down the life which, it is the conviction of his friends, contained the promise of a brilliant future. He was stricken with pneumonia the third of October, 1890, and died after an illness of three days. E. L. T.

HUGH HENRY BROGAN.

"After recovering my health, which was not at all good during 1888 and 1889, I went, in April, 1890, to University of Strassburg, where, in December, 1891, I succeeded in obtaining my Ph.D. degree in physics." Expects to devote himself to teaching as a profession.

ARTHUR LANGMAID CALHOUN.

Continued his connection with the "Boston Evening Traveller" until about two years ago. He then went West, and has settled in Tacoma, Wash., where he has been doing editorial and reportorial work on the "Tacoma Daily Ledger." He is married and has one child.

FREDERIC IVES CARPENTER.

"Read law one year in Chicago; married December 12, 1888, and came to Menominee, Mich., where I have since been in business with the Kirby-Carpenter Co., lumber manufacturers; also interested in local electric-light companies, and in the general advancement of the interests of this town, admirably situated to become a considerable shipping port, wholesaling and manufacturing centre, and seat of iron industries." Is a member of the Chicago University Club.

CHARLES FREDERIC CARRIER.

"January 1, 1888, found me at the Harvard Law School studying and debating scholastic distinctions of the common law. From there I came in the fall of 1888 to Santa Barbara, Cal., where, after a few months more of study, I was admitted to the California bar. Almost immediately thereafter I formed a partnership with a lawyer of this place (Jarrett T. Richards), which has continued ever since. For about three years I have practised law, quae est eadem profession I studied at Harvard, absque hoc that I have had anything to do with common-law procedure. My bright imaginings of a uniformly successful career were dashed by my first case; but surviving this early humiliation, I have since conducted to a successful issue a good proportion of the suits intrusted to my charge. I am still single, having divorced, but not wedded, women."

ROYAL PHELPS CARROLL.

Was married on March 3, 1891, to Marion Langdon, daughter of Eugene and Harriet Lowndes Langdon at Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y.

JOHN DERTHICK CAREY.

"I am conscious of no events in my life, since the last report, that from even my own narrow perspective seem important. The first of January, 1891, I was sworn in as one of the two school commissioners of this county, and since then my life has been a succession of examinations, district-school visiting, essays, and lectures on school subjects; and, in brief, I have become part of the endless problem; 'What is to become of our rural school?' I am well and healthy, so are my family, and we will be glad to see any of my old friends."

ARTHUR PATTERSON CHADBOURNE.

Writes from Berlin, Germany, March, 1892, where and elsewhere in Europe he has been furthering his medical education since the fall of 1891. He took his M.D. at the Harvard Medical School in June, 1889, and positions in the Massachusetts General Hospital and the Lying-in Hospital at Boston occupied his time until he went to Europe.

ALLEN HOWARD CHAMBERLAIN.

"I graduated from the Harvard Medical School in June, 1888; was interne in the Massachusetts Eye Infirmary for the two years ending April, 1890; then I hung out my M.D. sign in Kansas City, Mo., where it remained until June, 1891. Am now in the practice of medicine in my native place, Foxcroft, Me."

WINTHROP ASTOR CHANLER.

Sends his report from Switzerland, where he was at the time, travelling. After a year spent in Washington, he travelled with his family in Europe and Morocco, interrupted by returns to this country. He has two more children: John Winthrop, born at Sorrento, Italy, August 28, 1889, and Margaret Mary Beatrice, born at Bar Harbor, Me., August 21, 1891. He is a member of the Knickerbocker, Union, Harvard, and other clubs of New York City.

THOMAS HERBERT CHASE.

Is engaged in the marble business in New York City, with Taber & Co.

HORACE CLARK.

"Upon completion of my service as house physician, Boston Lying-in Hospital, I studied medicine in Vienna until October, 1889, when I began practice in New York City, being connected with the Throat Department, College of Physicians and Surgeons. After two years I was obliged to discontinue active practice on account of ill health, and returned to Europe, with my family, to spend a year in study there, at Vienna and Heidelberg." Has now returned to America and writes from St. Paul, Minn.; talks of settling in the Northwest. Another son was born, January 28, 1889, at Somerville, Mass., Andrew McIntosh Clark.

LEONARD BROWN CLARK.

"After leaving the Medical School I took the position of house officer at the Worcester City Hospital for one year, beginning with August. While here I entered the Massachusetts Medical Society. At the end of my term of service I took the position of a friend who had just been attacked by typhoid fever. This was at Hardwick, Mass. My friend died after a short illness, and I remained in Hardwick till February, 1890. From there I came to Waverley, where I hope to stay for some time to come."

JOHN CODMAN.

"I have been attending to business closely and with fair success. Lately somewhat handicapped by the loss of time incident to recovering the use of my left leg, through which I was shot in March, 1891, and of my right leg, which my horse broke by falling upon it in December, 1891."

NATHAN EMERY COFFIN.

"Was nominated in 1891 by the Republicans to represent Des Moines and Polk County in the twenty-fourth General Assembly of Iowa, and was elected, and sat in the General Assembly that recently adjourned." Married June 5, 1890, at Des Moines, Ia., Winnie Belle Ewing, daughter of D. R. and Lucinda Ewing. Was assistant county attorney for Polk County in 1891, and is a member of the University Club of Des Moines.

ALLANIAH DAVIS COLE.

"Residing at the same place, still holding the office of Master in Chancery, I have kept the even tenor of my way; in the meanwhile, although a little older, and I trust a little wiser, I have not married."

EDWARD LYON COLLINS.

Is engaged in the real-estate business, with an office in Boston and residence in Waban (Newton), Mass.

JOHN JOSLIN COLONY.

"Since last Class Report was issued have not married, written books or poems, or perpetrated anything of like nature. In civil life have climbed to the position of common councilman in the Keene city government, and in military life hold the office of 1st Lieutenant, Co. G, 2d Reg't, New Hampshire National Guard. Still hold out at Harrisville, N.H., with the Cheshire Mills."

WINTHROP COWDIN.

Treasurer of the Algonquin Company of Passaic, N.J., a woollen manufacturing concern, with offices in New York, at 54 Worth Street, and also in Passaic, N.J. "I divide my time between the farm at New Castle and my business." Is a member of the Union and University Clubs.

HENRY BRINTON COXE.

Is engaged in the wholesale coal business at Philadelphia. Is a member of the Rittenhouse, Philadelphia, and other clubs.

GEORGE ARTHUR CRAIGIN.

"House officer in various departments of Boston City Hospital, from August, 1888, till January, 1891. During 'Outpatient service' at this hospital was interne at Boston Lunatic Hospital (January–July, 1889). January, 1891, sailed as ship-surgeon to Fayal, on the bark 'Kennard.' The vessel was lost. I visited the Azores, and returned via England. Served as house officer at Boston Lying-in Hospital, May–September, 1891. Now settled in Boston, and hold an appointment as District Physician to Boston Dispensary." M.D. and A.M. Harvard, June, 1890. Is a member of the Boston City Hospital Club and Massachusetts Medical Society.

ADAMS CROCKER.

"January 1, 1888, I was finishing my third year as an apprentice in gingham and cotton yarn mills. August, 1888, entered the employ of Deering, Milliken, & Co., dry-goods commission merchants, New York, as a 'young man not afraid of work.' I remained with them till January, 1890, when I became treasurer and agent of the Fitchburg Manufacturing Company, manufacturing the finer grades of colored cotton dress-goods, ginghams, etc. I still hold this position. I was married in June, 1890, in New York City. Since January, 1890, my home has been in Fitchburg."

HAMILTON ROWAN CURTIS.

Continues to live in Boston, but is not engaged in any business. Writes that he has nothing of general interest to report.

GRAFTON DULANY CUSHING.

Graduated from Harvard Law School in June, 1888, receiving the two degrees of A.M. and LL.B. The following year was spent in teaching at Groton Academy. Two years in a Boston law office, and the past year devoted to study abroad, fill out the period since the last report. Has published an article on Trade-marks in the "Harvard Law Review."

GEORGE FAUNTLEROY DAVIDSON.

"February 25, 1892. Five years to-day since my eyes gave way, incapacitating me completely from their use. I have been trying to get back their use, but so far with only partial success; for two years unable to do anything. In 1890 built, with my brother, a 10-ton cutter, from designs by Edward Burgess, on which I spend some time every year. In June, '91, undertook to run a ranch near Healdsburg for a friend, and am still doing it. A general farm. I make wine, raisins, raise fruit, hay, corn, horses, etc. A farmer perforce and not by choice. Don't want any in mine as a steady thing."

BANCROFT GHERARDI DAVIS.

"Have been living at Cambridge and practising law at 23 Court street, Boston, since September, 1888. Have also been in the employ of the Reporter of the Supreme Court of the United States since October, 1889. Unmarried." Member of Common Council of Cambridge for years 1891, 1892. Took the degrees of LL.B. and A.M. Harvard in June, 1888. Is a member of the Colonial Club of Cambridge, and University Club of Boston.

FREDERIC ADRIAN DELANO.

"I have staid by the great Burlington Road, (C., B., & Q. R.R.), and what is more important, perhaps, it has staid by me. Among the earliest events in my career since January 1, 1888, which are worth mentioning, is the great strike of enginemen, which gave every one a chance to do something and to enlarge his experience at the same time. In November, 1888, I was married in Chicago, and since then have been blessed with two daughters. So far as my advancement on the road is concerned, I must confess (between ourselves) it has not been meteoric, but, to use a common expression, we all hope by 'sawing wood' 'to get there just the same.'"

PAUL SHIPMAN DRANE.

Has made no report.

WILLIAM KINNICUT DRAPER.

"In May, 1888, took the degree of M.D., at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York. Went to Germany and spent six months in Berlin and Dresden. Returned in November and entered Roosevelt Hospital, New York. Served there as interne for eighteen months; and, on leaving at expiration of the term of service, again went abroad, where twelve months were spent in Munich, Vienna, and Berlin studying; and three months in travelling in Germany, Italy, and England. Returned to America in October, 1891, and settled in New York."

THEODORE DUNHAM.

"In June, 1888, I became an M.D. Harvard. In the same month I went to Bellevue Hospital, where I had been appointed on the Fourth Surgical Division. In April, 1890, I received my degree from the hospital. In the summer I went abroad, and was gone over a year, studying the greater part of the time in Vienna. Since November, 1891, I have been practising medicine in New York."

PERCY DAVID DWIGHT.

"No change has taken place in my circumstances since the last secretary's report. The only new club that I belong to, which is not a permanent one, is a literary club, where papers on American authors have been read by the members during the winter season."

EDWARD TYLER EDGERLY.

"In the spring of 1889 I completed my medical course at the Medical Department of the Northwestern University, and by competitive examination obtained an appointment as interne in the Cook County Hospital, in Chicago. Here I was associated with Dr. Henry F. Lewis of our class. I served in the various capacities of medical and surgical assistant and house-physician and house-surgeon, being chief of internes the last six months.

Since leaving the hospital, October 1, 1890, I have been practising my profession on the South Side (Hyde Park). I have been Demonstrator of Normal Histology in my medical alma mater for the past two years, and during the present winter have given the lectures on Physical Diagnosis, besides being assistant in the medical clinic. I was married February 5, 1891, to Miss Nettie Thurston, daughter of the late Dr. Irvin H. Thurston, of Garden City, Minn."

JAMES LYMAN FISK.

"I am still engaged in the manufacturing business, and am interested in the Fiskdale Mills, which are located in the Village of Fiskdale, in Worcester County, Mass. As chairman of your committee, I have also been occupied with the task of getting up the class albums, and perhaps should also consider myself a photographer for the present. Although I have not been away from home, I feel as if I had been around the world, as the work on the albums has taken me by letter to England, France, Germany, South Africa, China, South America, and Mexico, as well as all over the United States."

FRANCIS BRINLEY FOGG.

"From 1885 to 1887 I kept up my athletics while studying law, and bettered my records as follows: Running high jump, 5 ft. 10 in.; high kick, 9 ft. 3½ in.; hitch and kick, 8 ft. 11½ in., world's record; hop, step, and jump, 42 ft.; 16-lb. shot, 32 ft. 2¾ in. In 1886 I was admitted to the bar. In 1887 I lost the gold medal for highest scholarship in the law class by a fraction of a per cent. In 1887 and 1888 I practised in the Davidson County Chancery Court and the State Supreme Court. My father turned over all the civil damage cases to me against the N. C. & St. L. R.R., and of the thirteen I argued unassisted I won nine. Three of these were reversals. From 1888 to 1890 my health was wretched indeed, and I gave up law entirely. From 1890 to the present time I have been in partnership with my father in breeding and raising fancy trotting stock. In 1890 our string won five races out of nine trotted, being second once and third twice. In 1891 our string was the best in the South. Out of thirty races trotted and paced, we got a piece of the money twenty-six times, won thirteen, and were second five times. My health is now steadily improving, and I shall continue breeding trotters."

"Went abroad in 1887, and have been all over the eastern part of the United States at various times." Hermitage, Capital, and several driving clubs.

GEORGE EDMOND FOSS.

"Graduated from Union College of Law in June, 1889; received degree of LL.B. Was president of my class. Won fifty dollars oratorical prize for best oration spoken at Commencement. Received honorable mention for Legal Thesis upon 'The present system of nominating and electing the President.' Associated for a time with Alfred Ennis, formerly General Counsel for Pullman Palace Car Co., and with Judge George Driggs (now of Circuit Bench). Am now practising law for myself."

SAMUEL LYNDE FOSTER.

"January, 1888, found me in San Francisco. From January to June, 1888, I travelled in northern and southern California on expert electrical work and pleasure combined. In June I returned to Cambridge and Boston, hunted up old friends, revisited old scenes. June 13, 1888, I was married by Phillips Brooks in Trinity Church, Boston, to Miss Marion Beattie, and left at once for Bay City, Mich., where I accepted the position of general manager of the local electric light company. This position I filled with credit to myself and profit to the stockholders till December, 1890, when my father's death called me again to San Francisco. Since coming to California I have been engaged in electrical work, and have been since October, 1891, superintendent of the San Francisco and San Mateo Railway Company, a $2,000,000 electrical railway company. While in Michigan, I received the various Masonic degrees up to the commandery, and left there a Knight Templar. I also furbished up my colonial records and joined the Sons of the American Revolution. Since coming to San Francisco, I have joined the Harvard Club of San Francisco, and hope soon to join the University Club. My marriage has proved a most happy one, my health has been and is now excellent, the results of my work have been gratifying and the prospects are very satisfactory, if not actually flattering. My experience so far has taught me that some of the essentials of success are a modicum of brains, unbreakable health, and indefatigable application."

AMOS TUCK FRENCH.

"Most of the time since January 1, 1888, I have spent in catching trains, and I am now a confirmed victim of the habit. I live in the country and do business in New York City. I have been with the Manhattan Trust Company since April, 1888, in one position or another, and I have been absent from my gilded securities-cage buta few days in that time. My children bear witness to the excellence of Tuxedo air, and with their father weigh 272 pounds. I have built a moderate-sized house, where I am settled, and I do not expect to move again until I go to the White House. Any classmate having good business to offer and no favors to ask, I shall be glad to see at the old stand, corner of Wall and Nassau streets, New York. Any classmate having neither one nor the other, I will meet above Canal street, catch weights." Is a member of the Union, University, and Metropolitan Clubs of New York.

JOHN HAYS GARDINER.

"The first part of 1888 I was tutoring two boys preparing for college. Then my health and strength broke down, and I have done nothing since. The winter of 1888–89 I spent in the Azores and the south of Spain. Since then I have lived in Longwood in the winter and at Gardiner, Me., in the summer. My health is improving slowly, and I have begun to do a little tutoring again."

CHARLES FRANCIS GILMAN.

Writes that he has been "nowhere" and done "nothing." His two children, Robert Conant Gilman and Grace Gilman, were born respectively on January 28, 1889, and May 10, 1891, both at Boston.

CHARLES BERTIE GLEASON.

"None of the blessings enumerated have fallen to my share, nor has anything of moment happened to me. In December, 1890,

I went into exile. I sought out at once the city of the finest location and the most delightful climate, and have since been living in it (in just four of it, so far). Almost all my time since January 1, 1891, has been employed in teaching in the Los Angeles county schools, and this year as teacher of languages in the Union High School in Redlands. In my last vacation, after a trip to Boston, I went North, and spent several months in inspecting the Ventua oil country. The great advantage of my present location is that I am already one of the oldest inhabitants, and among the authorities upon subjects of climate, Washington novels, and corner lots."

JOHN McGREGOR GOODALE.

"I was ill with typhoid fever at Utica, N.Y., the greater part of 1889. Returned to New York and was admitted to the bar in the fall of that year. Have practised law in New York since then, as a member of Hitchcock, Harvey, & Goodale till May 1, 1891, and subsequently alone. I have done evening work in the management of the Neighborhood Guild of Forsyth Street, a club-house in the tenement district, now under the University Settlement Society of New York." Is a member of the Harvard and Reform Clubs of New York.

ROBERT STETSON GORHAM.

"June, 1888, I was graduated at the Harvard Law School, and soon after entered the law office of Ropes, Gray, & Loring, 50 State Street, Boston, where I have since been practising law. June 26, 1890, I was married at Duxbury, Mass., to Alvine J. Thomas. I lived in Boston till December, 1891, and then moved to West Newton, one of the suburbs of Boston, which will, I expect, be my permanent home. I have one child, Thomas Gorham, born April 14, 1891. Ed. Woods of our class lives near by; there are several other Harvard men in the town, and as the tennis courts of the 'Neighborhood Club' are close at hand, the discipline of college days proves not wholly lost."

WALTER FOLGER GREENMAN.

"Gathering a society and building a Unitarian Church in Winona kept me very busy for the first year and a half after leaving the Divinity School. My personal affairs made it necessary for me to return to Massachusetts in the spring of 1891. In June, 1891, I was engaged as pastor of the First Parish Church in Fitchburg, the charge I now have. I was married in December, 1888, to Mabel Josephine Henshaw, of Cambridge, Mass."

FRED SUMNER HAINES.

"In the summer of 1889 I gave up the position of Assistant Cashier of the Rochester National Bank to accept a position in Second National Bank of Elmira. Remained in Elmira until the fall of 1890, when, after a few weeks' vacation in New Hampshire and Maine, I came West again to join with friends in organizing the bank of which I am at present cashier. I would not be loyal to the institution if I did not say that we have special facilities for making collections at lowest rates in all the principal towns of Southern Minnesota." Has a boy, John Sherburn Haines, born at Rochester, Minn., January 23, 1889. Is a member of the Harvard Club of Minnesota.

WALTER ALLEN HALBERT.

"I continued in the employ of the insurance company as general agent and cashier of its Kansas City office, until after the death of my father, which occurred in the summer of 1890. A few months after his death I obtained a transfer from the agency department to the bond and mortgage department of the same company. My work since that time has been the examination of pieces of real estate which have been offered to the company as security for loans in various Western cities. The cities to which my business has thus far called me are within the territory marked by Indianapolis on the east, Duluth on the north, Denver on the west, and St. Louis on the south."

WILLIAM ALEXANDER HAMMOND.

"In June, 1888, I left King's College, where for three years I had been lecturer in classics, and went to Germany to study the literature and philosophy of the ancients. From 1888–1891 most of my time was spent working in the line of the above-mentioned subjects, with intervals of rest taken in different parts of Germany, Austria, Italy, and Greece. The only vacation worth mentioning here was one of ten weeks in the summer of 1889, spent for the most part out of Germany, the beginning of which was made (in company of two University friends) in Rob Roys on the Danube from Regensburg to Vienna. This stretch of river, down which we were nine days in paddling, I can warmly recommend to any 1885 men who are looking for an ideal piece of water for canoeing. On February 8, 1892, I was appointed Assistant Professor of Ancient and Mediæval Philosophy in Cornell University." Took the degree of Ph.D. Leipzig, in 1891.

OTTO RHEINHARD HANSEN.

"Until June, 1888, I was in the Harvard Law School. Since then I have had the now popular complaint known as nervous prostration. I have lain fallow, hoping to gather new energy in the interval. The Bahamas, the Riviera, and Atlantic City were the scenes of my idleness. Since January, 1892, I have been reviving what I once learned of law in Cambridge, and have just been admitted to the Wisconsin Bar. I shall probably practise law in Milwaukee, Deo volente."

CHARLES MATHER HARRINGTON.

"Since January 1, 1888, I have sunk into the rut of ordinary law practice. On April 1, 1891, I emerged long enough to get married, and since that event contentment, happiness, and law practice have assumed absolute sway over me. Yesterday, February 22, 1892, my wife and I were blessed with a little baby boy, and as a consequence all other events of my life have receded to the background, and are known and remembered no more. May all the rest of my classmates do likewise!" Is a member of the Saturn Club of Buffalo.

JAMES MOTT HARTSHORNE, Jr.

"Nothing has happened to me which would be of the slightest interest to any one outside of my immediate family." Was married November 18, 1889, at Chicago, to Mary Harvey Shufeldt, daughter of Henry H. and Emmeline E. Shufeldt. Has a son, Harold, born at New York, September 8, 1891. Is a member of the St. Nicholas Society of New York.

DANIEL LYMAN HAZARD.

"Severed my connections with J. C. Tucker, Jr., in March, 1888, and joined my brother, T. G. Hazard, Jr., in surveying at Narragansett Pier, where I remained until December, 1889. At that time I came to Washington and entered the employ of the Massachusetts Topographical Survey Commission, and since then have been at the Coast Survey Office in Washington engaged upon the computation of the triangulation required in the determination of the town boundaries of the State of Massachusetts." Is a member of the National Geographical Society and of the Harvard Club of Rhode Island.

WILLIAM HENRY HIDDEN, Jr.

Is now in the banking business in Boston, and continues to reside in Cambridge.

HENRY THEODORE HILDRETH.

"January 1, 1888, I was a student of classical philology in the University of Berlin, Germany, holding a Parker fellowship in Harvard University. I remained at the University of Berlin till the end of the summer semester, August 1, 1888. During the spring vacation of that year I visited Rome, Florence, and other places of interest in Italy, and then returned to America by way of Belgium and England. The term of my fellowship expired in September, 1888. In 1888–89 I was a resident graduate student of classical philology in Harvard University; in 1889–90, instructor in classics in the Parish private school, Boston, and private tutor, — my residence in both years, Cambridge; and from 1890 have been Professor of Greek in the University of Wooster, Wooster, Ohio."

JOSEPH ADNA HILL.

"I have been in Germany about two years, September, 1889–August, 1891. Most of this time was spent in Berlin. When in America I have made Cambridge my headquarters. My occupation has been study principally. Have contributed articles to the 'Quarterly Journal of Economics' and 'Christian Union.'" Received the degree of A.M. Harvard in 1888.

HARRY RAYMOND HILLIARD.

Was last heard from as engaged in business in Pittsburg, Pa., being secretary of the Alleghany Geometrical Wood Carving Company.

MARLAND COGSWELL HOBBS.*

Died of typhoid fever at his home in Brookline, June 3, 1891. He was born at Roxbury, Mass., now part of Boston, November 20, 1862. His father, William Hobbs, had been a lawyer and public-spirited citizen, and his mother, Mary Marland Hobbs, was a daughter of the Hon. Francis Cogswell, of Andover, Mass. Early in his life his family moved to Brookline, which thereafter was his home. He prepared for college at the Brookline High School and graduated at the head of his class.

His course at college was a most useful and honorable one, and formed "a sound preparation for the study of law," the purpose for which he had sought a collegiate education. Coming to Cambridge with but few friends, he won his way by his attractive personal qualities to a large circle of acquaintances and to many positions of trust in college life, and that, too, in spite of a delicate physique which prevented him from taking part in the distinguishing field of athletics. Perhaps among us there he was most widely known from his early connection with and as the head of the "Herald-Crimson," to the interests of which some of his best work outside of regular college duties was devoted. It was the administration of that paper, of which he was the chief, which laid the permanent foundation of the success of Harvard's daily. A member of the Hasty Pudding Club, Institute, O.K., St. Paul's Society, Harvard Union, Athletic, Bicycle, and Lacrosse Associations, in almost all of them he was in demand to hold official positions. In sophomore year he was the orator at the class dinner at the Quincy House, and in senior year was elected one of the photographic committee.

Three years at the Law School, full of activity and study, followed his graduation from college. It was the special work to which he had been looking forward from boyhood, the preparation for his life task. He was successively elected to membership in the Thayer and Pow Wow law clubs, was clerk of each in turn, and was later a member of the Langdell club. His old work on the college daily stood him in good stead, for the knowledge gained on the "Herald-Crimson" was of great aid in clearing away the many difficulties which attended the birth of the "Harvard Law Review," of which he was one of the founders, and of which he served as the second president. Meanwhile his pen had not been idle in other directions, for he had written several essays on historical and economic subjects, one of which brought him a Bowdoin prize, and others prizes from economic societies. He had also acted at times as correspondent for a number of leading New York and Boston papers.

In January, 1888, he was admitted to the Suffolk Bar at Boston, and in March was appointed by Governor Ames to the new clerkship of the Police Court of Brookline. In June of that year he took his LL.B., and began his regular practice of law in Boston, at first on his own account, and later as one of the counsel for the Lamson Consolidated Store Service Company.

Early in 1891 he married, at Salem, Elizabeth Frothingham, daughter of the late James O. Safford, of that city.

His work as counsel for the Lamson Co. was both intricate and arduous, necessitating frequent trips to try and settle suits in different parts of the country. This undoubtedly told upon his physical strength more than he or his friends fully appreciated at the time. Add to this the fact that during his freshman year at college he had been attacked by a violent and dangerous heart trouble which had endangered his life for weeks and left its permanent mark upon him, so that he had always thereafter to be extremely cautious of physical over-exertion, and it is not strange that when in May, 1891, a mild case of typhoid fever attacked him he was not able to overcome it, and life gradually but surely ebbed away.

To his friends and legal acquaintances his death was a sad blow. They had promised themselves that his stand as a public-spirited citizen and his rank in his profession would be high ones. These hopes were rightly based upon qualities of mind and heart already shown. Quick-witted, ready in argument, clear of head, and genial and courteous in his manner, he had already attracted the attention and favorable comments of his elders at the bar, and gave every indication of a brilliant and useful career. Among his intimates he had shown those priceless qualities of true friendship the loss of which with him leaves for them a gap never to be filled.

H. M. W.

At the meeting held on June 23, 1891, a committee was appointed to take suitable action, and it has since presented the following tribute:

The Class of 1885 wishes to place upon its records its sense of loss in the death of Marland Cogswell Hobbs. He was a man of brilliant parts, of keen, quaint, and incisive wit; of a personality that lent its charm to everything he undertook. In his death his profession has lost a servant who served her faithfully, who in the fulness of time might worthily have won her highest honor. His class has lost a classmate whose interest was ever active; and those who knew him best have lost indeed a friend, who helped them by his word, whose act was high, whose sympathy was ready. His voice is silent, but the remembrance of his kindly spirit remains forever with us, and forever will arise when we look back again to the Cambridge days. And mindful in our loss of the nearer ties that bound him, we extend our sympathy to his widow and to his family.

HARRY HOLDEN.

"With three years' business experience, after having 'begun at the bottom' in one of Boston's large dry-goods establishments, I went West, and landed in Kearney, Neb., a small town being then actively 'boomed' by Eastern capitalists. Speculated in real estate, managed a retail dry-goods and clothing store, and clerked in a hotel until suddenly called home to Haverhill, Mass., by serious illness in my family, which precluded any further Western experiments. After a short vacation, represented on the road a Connecticut underwear mill until January 1, 1891, when I formed a satisfactory connection with a retail dry-goods business in Pittsfield, Mass." Was married at Lexington, Mass., June 10, 1890, to Mary A. Todd, daughter of Nathaniel M. and Helen A. Todd. A daughter, Nathalie, was born at Pittsfield, March 20, 1891.

JOHN FRANCIS HOLLAND.

"January 1, 1888, I was at the Harvard Law School, doing a one-year course. June, 1888, I obtained the degree of M.A. on the year's work in the Law School, and returning to Chicago was admitted to the bar of Illinois in October, 1888. The eight months following were spent in travelling in Europe and Egypt with a young man whom I assisted somewhat in his studies. Returning in the summer of 1889, I settled down in Chicago at the practice of law. April, 1890, I formed a partnership with Frank Hamlin, Harvard, '84, and in April, 1891, we took in another Harvard man, W. C. Boyden, '86, and are now doing business under the firm name and style of Hamlin, Holland, & Boyden."

WILLIAM PARMELEE HOMANS.

Is in Baltimore, where he holds the position of head chemist for Daubmann & Co.

EDWIN HOWARD.

Has been touring with several leading theatrical companies. His headquarters are at Boston. For the season of 1889-90 he was with the company of the late Lawrence Barrett.

OSCAR SHAFTER HOWARD.

"The ordinary vicissitudes of life in the 'wild and woolly West' have been mine since January 1, 1888. I have not made a fortune; nor have I lost one. I have not made a success at anything as yet; but have hopes of so doing before the end of the century. In San Francisco we are all so very slow and behind the times, that too much should not be expected of us. We are all waiting, like Micawber, for something to turn up; and that something seems to consist of a competing railroad, or the Nicaragua canal. As long as we have but one railroad, and no canal, you can expect nothing but the dullest of reports from this coast from Harvard men, and even from those '85 Harvard men who are unfortunate enough to be obliged to live here. When we get our new competing railroad and our canal, we will have better reports to make to our class secretaries; better accounts of ourselves and of our fortunes. In the meantime we must all take back seats in the gallery of life's theatre, still keeping up the hopes of our youth, nor allowing our ambition to flag; with a constant aim in view of eventually getting down in the front row somewhere — where we shall doubtless find all the '85 men who have been wise enough to reject the advice of the late Horace Greeley. In speaking thus discouragingly of the present condition of things here, I am referring to the city of San Francisco and the State of California. We are dreadfully hampered here by 'silurianism' and railroad monopoly. We need about fifty first-class funerals here to overcome the former difficulty, and a party of capitalists from New York and Boston to take a good look at the State, to overcome the second. As sure as they saw what a wonderful country and climate we have, they would jump at the opportunity of putting a new set of rails across the mountains. There are millions to be made out of such a project, and it goes a-begging! Chicago has twenty-eight railroads entering her limits, and an inland sea as well. We are 8,000 miles from New York or Liverpool by water, and are favored with one railroad, which practically owns us all, individually and collectively. In addition to terrific freight charges, we are heavily taxed for everything which requires coal or iron in its process of manufacture; for we have none of these on the coast. So that, naturally, the most sensible of us are counting on a change of government and a big reduction in the tariff. I am sorry, however, that 'the sensibles' are still in the minority here, another indication of the hopelessness of the present situation. We solicit your prayers and your capitalists — send them West." Is Paymaster of the California Naval Battalion.

ALFRED WILLIAM HOYT.

Is a banker of the firm of A. M. Hoyt & Co., of New York City.

JOHN LAMONTE HURST.

"I have resided in Denver since the spring of 1889, and found it to my advantage to engage in the real-estate and loan business, Denver being one of the Western centres where the activity in real-estate speculation has been most marked."

CYRUS WENDELL IRISH.

Is still engaged in teaching at the High School, Lowell, Mass. Was married June 27, 1889, at Lowell, to Carrie A., daughter of Julius C. and Mary E. Jackson.

LOUIS LINCOLN JACKSON.

"Received the degrees of A.M. and Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1888. Continued as assistant in the chemical laboratory during the college year 1888–89, and in the spring of 1889 was appointed to a Parker Fellowship. I spent the following two years studying in the chemical laboratories of Heidelberg, Munich, Göttingen, and Dresden. I returned to America in the fall of 1891 to accept a position as chemist for the National Chemical Wood Treatment Company of Brooklyn, N.Y."

ARTHUR STODDARD JOHNSON.

"I have had a quiet life at home, and not being in vigorous health have been unable to take up any regular business. I have interested myself, however, in philanthropic and Christian work, becoming a member of the board of directors of the Y.M.C.A., Little Wanderers' Home, and other organizations of a similar character. This winter I have been under the care of Dr. Mitchell, of Philadelphia, who, I am happy to say, has been and is doing much to help me on to a complete recovery of health."

HARRY WALTER JONES.

"Have led a very uneventful life. Am just recovering from a severe nervous trouble which has more or less incapacitated me for the last five years, and trust now I shall be able to make up for the lost time. Sorry I can give you nothing more interesting." Is a member of the Colonial Club of Cambridge.

ARTHUR KEITH.

"I have spent each summer, about five months, in geological work through the East Tennessee and Virginia valleys, and the Smoky Mountains of North Carolina. My winters have been passed in Washington in the routine of my profession." Is a member of the National Geographical Society and of the University Club of Washington.

DANIEL KELLEHER.

"Since I came to Seattle, two years ago, we have formed a society or club composed of the Harvard men of this city. It may seem surprising that in this young, though growing city of 50,000 people, situated in the far Northwest, on the shores of Puget Sound, we have a club of over thirty Harvard men. Most of them are graduates of the last seven or eight years, and many of them have taken prominent positions in their different walks of life. We meet once in three months, when we have some literary exercises, music, supper, and then spend the remainder of the evening in reminiscing on our alma mater, which we cherish as fondly as any of her sons." Is a lawyer.

MAXIMILIAN LINDSAY KELLNER.

Has continued his connection with the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, where he now holds an assistant professorship.

EDWARD KIRK KEEP.

Has made no report. It is supposed that he is still practising law at Buffalo, N.Y.

CHARLES CARROLL KING.

"I was in the Vermont Mutual Fire Insurance Co., at Montpelier, Vt., as a clerk, from June, 1888, to October, 1888; then became Governor Dillingham's private secretary. Took the Suffolk Bar examination in December, 1888; was admitted to practice January 15, 1889. Have since then practised law in Brockton, Mass., without interruption, without, however, seriously menacing that alluring place where, it is said, 'there's always room.' I regret greatly the absence of any of my classmates from my near vicinity. In order to see and visit an '85 man, I have to journey to Boston. A dozen '85 men would lift Plymouth County out of the ruts, and make her, moreover, a goodly county to live in."

RALPH MARTIN LANE.

"I am afraid you will find very little of interest in my report. I have been blessed with three fine boys, all of whom I hope, at the proper time, to send to Harvard. Unfortunately for me I have been so tied down to business that it has been quite impossible for me to go East during the past five years, and hence nearly all of my old-time associations have been lost. I hope, however, at some time in the future to renew them." Treasurer of Whitman Agricultural Company of St. Louis, Mo. Is a member of the University Club.

ROLLEN NORTH LARRABEE.

"January 1, 1888, found me at Alamositos (P.O., Tascosa), on the X.I.T. Ranch in Texas, buying provisions and shipping them to the various camps. I remained at this place — the company's headquarters — until September of the same year, when I moved into the nearest town on the railroad, where the company had built a warehouse for the storage of grain and supplies of all kinds. Tascosa proper was two miles from the railroad and across the river, and the settlement at the station consisted only of three wooden freight-houses, a wagon yard, and some horse-sheds. Here the station agent of the Ft. North & Denver R.R., his assistant, and I kept bachelors' hall. The fare was rough, for we cooked it ourselves, — to say nothing of washing the dishes afterwards; but we enjoyed it. How I have wished myself back, since then! Nothing but the fact that I was going home could have reconciled me to leaving it. I came home to Chicago in May, 1889, and after a month of looking about found work in the shops of the Western Electric Company. My three years' apprenticeship is nearly up. I have worked in all the departments which pertain to the construction and operation of electric-light apparatus, and have, within the last week, received orders to be ready to start out 'on the road' at any time. This 'going out on the road,' as the shop phrase is, means going to any outside station where things are not running smoothly, locating the trouble, and remedying it. I need add, only, that I find the work extremely interesting, and very exacting of one's spare time if one would keep abreast by reading and study."

JOHN LAWRENCE.

"In 1888 I gave up the study of law on account of my health, and since then farmed on a small scale on a place of seventy acres which I bought in Groton. I have been to Europe once since 1888." Is a lieutenant in the Naval Battalion of Massachusetts, the first one of its kind to be organized in the United States. He now has two daughters: Hester, born April 4, 1888, at Cambridge, and Mary, born October 7, 1890, at Boston.

EUGENE LENT.

"Mining, Denver, Colorado."

WILLIAM LEVERETT.

"Since January 1, 1888, I have been admitted to the bar of Columbia County, and also of Lackawanna County, Pa. Located in Scranton, Pa., in early part of 1890, and have been following my profession since that date. I have recently become connected with The Bradstreet Co., as their representative in Scranton."

HENRY FOSTER LEWIS

"After January 1, 1888, I finished the course in the Harvard Medical School, and a six months' term as externe in the Boston City Hospital. In October I took the position of interne in the Cook County Hospital, Chicago, and served eighteen months. I entered private practice in partnership with my cousin, Dr. Denslow Lewis, April, 1890, at Kenwood, Chicago. I was married to Minnie Dows Naa, a native of Siam, in July, 1890. A daughter, Katharine, was born April 11, 1891, and is now living. I have been Instructor in Clinical Medicine in the Post-Graduate Medical School of Chicago for two years, and Medical Examiner for the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York for six months."

LAWRENCE LITCHFIELD.

"Graduated from Bellevue Hospital Medical College in March, 1888. Served as surgical interne in Bellevue until October, 1889. After some special work in New York dispensaries came to Pittsburg late in December, 1889. Since that time have devoted myself to general practice with a leaning towards surgery, and I am more than satisfied with the way Pittsburgers have treated me. I feel more at home here since the organization of a Harvard Club, about a year ago. I am one of the assistant physicians to the West Pennsylvania Hospital, and to the Pittsburg Hospital for Children."

JOSEPH MANSFIELD LONG.

"In May, 1888, I graduated from the Newton Theological Seminary, Newton Centre, Mass., and June 1st following was settled as pastor of the Baptist Church at Canton, Me. In the fall brought a bride there from Washington, D.C., maiden name, Eliza Carroll Snell. Enjoyed very much a pastorate there of three and a half years. Have just become pastor of the Baptist Church at East Winthrop in the same State, one of the best of rural churches. We have a little girl of two years, and a baby boy, Harvard, '14. Country life has improved my weight and general health greatly. Am working for the improvement of our community life in every way. Hope my classmates are enjoying life as much as I."

DANIEL WILLIAM LOTHMAN.

"My life since I left college has been quiet and not eventful. As 'a rolling stone gathers no moss,' so a wandering schoolteacher amasses no wealth. No; neither does one who remains in one place. Still, the latter course seemed to me preferable. When I left college I secured a position as teacher in the Central High School of Cleveland, and have taught there ever since. We have a high school which we think is as large as any in the country, and it is growing rapidly. This year there are almos 1,500 students, and next year there will probably be more. The number that is preparing for college, especially for the larger Eastern colleges, is rapidly increasing. The Harvard Club of Cleveland is prospering, and promises to do valuable service to its alma mater in this section of the country."

JOHN ROOFE McARTHUR.

"In February–August, 1888, travelled in Europe, Egypt, Holy Land, Turkey, Greece. Only one thing par excellence has happened to me (and that didn't 'happen,' but was predestined, so I am informed), to wit: (that which has now happened to so many of the sons of '85) to be married to the — yes, the best woman in the world! Since that time I have been a few months abroad, have lived a few months in Cambridge, and then settled down to a lawyer's life in New York."

ROBERT LATIMER McCOOK.

Gave up the law in which he was engaged in New York City in 1888, and for a time was concerned in the Chicago Horse Shoe Company at East Chicago. Is not engaged in any business at present, and is wintering at Bermuda.

WILLIAM MORROW McINNES.

"After graduating from the Harvard Law School in June, 1888, I went to Nantucket, Mass., for a short vacation, and in August entered the law office of Myers & Warner, Boston, as a law student, with whom I remained as a student and clerk for nearly three years. In May, 1891, I became associated in business with my late lamented classmate, Arthur L. Allen, with law offices in the new Exchange Building, Boston, where I am still located. My vacation in 1889 I spent at Mount Desert, Me., and in the White Mountains, N.H., while in 1890 I made the most of the short time at my disposal by taking a most enjoyable trip on a coasting schooner to Nova Scotia and the Bay of Fundy. I am unmarried."

JOHN FRANCIS MAHONEY.

"Nothing unusual has occurred since I left college. I have been practising medicine ever since graduation, and have built up a good and lucrative practice. I have not had much time for social or other pastimes, but have confined myself very closely to my profession." Is a member of the staff of the Frost Hospital, Chelsea.

EDWARD DUDLEY MARSH.

"My life has been spent almost without interruption in Boston, being broken only by such changes as are incident to the life of every man. One day is but a reproduction of the preceding, with some slight change in the minor details. Nothing has befallen me which could excite surprise or interest in any one outside the narrow circle of my own immediate family." Is a member of the Puritan and Athletic Clubs.

MANTON MAVERICK.

"From January of 1888 until spring of 1891 I resided in Washington, was employed in War Department, Pension Bureau, and as Clerk of World's Fair Committee, U.S. House of Representatives; completed three years' course in Columbian University Law School, Washington, D.C., in June, 1889; was admitted to bar of District of Columbia in May, 1889; in spring of 1891 settled in Chicago with intention of making permanent location; was admitted to Illinois Bar; opened law office, and am now practising."

EDMUND SMITH MIDDLETON.

"From January 1, 1888, to June 12, 1889, completed course at General Theological Seminary, New York. During senior year was awarded 'Alumni Prize in Ecclesiastical History. From October 1, 1889, to October 1, 1890, was assistant rector at All Saints' Church, Worcester, Mass. Shortly after I withdrew from the Episcopalian ministry and entered the Catholic Church. With the exception of four months passed in study at the Catholic University, Washington, D.C., I have since that time been engaged in literary work. Since the last Class Report I have published twenty occasional poems. On January 9, 1892, G. W. Dillingham, New York, published my first book, 'A Study in Girls.'"

EZRA PALMER MILLS.

"Nothing of special interest has happened to me since the publication of the last Class Report. I have lived all the time in New York City engaged in the practice of law, part of the time with a partner, but for over two years last past alone; and it is my opinion that there are too many lawyers in the world, or at least in New York." Is a member of the Harvard and Colonial Clubs of New York City.

JUSTIN PERRY MINER.

"Until July, 1890, I continued in the school-book publishing business in St. Paul, Minnesota. Coming East at that time, I concluded to remain in Boston, where I have since been connected with 'To-Day,' and since early in 1892 have also had charge of 'The Weekly Bulletin of Newspaper and Periodical Literature.' Both these papers, as many of the class may know, are edited and published by a classmate, Mr. J. Morrison-Fuller. I was married in Colorado, October 24, 1888, to Miss Martha K. Moseley. While in the West I enjoyed a membership in the Harvard Club of St. Paul and Minneapolis. Am a member of the Boston Press Club."

ALFRED HENNEN MORRIS.

Lives at Westchester, New York, and is a member of the Manhattan and other New York clubs. Was married at Philadelphia, April 30, 1889, to Jessie, daughter of William W. Harding. A son, John A. Morris, Jr., was born March 27, 1891.

JAMES GREGORY MUMFORD.

"In June, 1888, I was graduated in medicine at the Harvard School, and for several months subsequently travelled in Europe. In February, 1889, I was appointed a surgical officer at the Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston, and served in that capacity until September, 1890, when I obtained a corresponding position at the Boston Lying-in Hospital. Since the first of January, 1891, I have been engaged in the private practice of medicine in Boston, being associated with Dr. Maurice H. Richardson, of this city." Was married at Troy, N.Y., January 6, 1892, to Helen S. Ford, daughter of Daniel W. and Marietta B. Ford. Is a member of the Somerset and other clubs.

WILLIAM STANISLAUS MURPHY.

Writes that "nothing of interest" has happened to him since the last report. Is still unmarried, and in the U.S. Civil Service at Boston.

JOHN BREED NEWHALL.

"Before settling down to work after leaving the Harvard Law School in 1888 I travelled four months in Europe for pleasure and recreation, and am now practising law in Boston and Lynn. In 1889 was elected a member of the Common Council of my native city, Lynn, being reëlected in 1890 and 1891, and being chosen president for the year 1891 and 1892. In 1891 was chosen secretary of the Lynn Board of Trade."

SETH NICHOLS.

"Nothing to write about myself which would be of interest to classmates. I am in the same business in New York City as stated in the previous Class Report."

JOHN HAWKS NOBLE.

"Early in 1888 illness obliged me to give up work in the Western offices of the U. P. Railway, and I returned to the East, where I undertook nothing for several months. In the autumn of that year I entered the Harvard Law School, where I continued till the early spring of 1890. I then left the school to take up some private tutoring, which has occupied me since. During this period I have been living in or near New York, or else travelling in this country or abroad.

WILLIAM BELDEN NOBLE.

Prefers to report to secretary of Class of '84. Writes of '85, "Not in it."

ELIOT NORTON.

Lawyer, New York City.

EDWARD ISAAC KIMBALL NOYES.

"Since January, 1888, my life has not been eventful. I remained with the Kansas Loan and Trust Co., in their Boston office, until they removed it to Philadelphia in August, 1890. I then went to New York with the firm of Farson, Leach, & Co., Bankers and Dealers in Municipal Bonds, returning to Boston in January, 1891, and forming the Bond Investment firm of Noyes & Bridge, in the Exchange Building, where I now am. I am neither married nor engaged, and have no expectations in that line, but reside in Cambridge with my mother."

GEORGE READ NUTTER.

"I remained at the Harvard Law School until June, 1889. While there I took an interest in the "Harvard Law Review," and was its editor-in-chief. After graduation I was admitted to the bar at Boston, and entered the office of Warren & Brandeis, where I have since remained." Is a member of the Puritan Club.

JOSÉ VICTORIO ONATIVIA.

Is living in New York City. Is not engaged in business. A member of the Union Club.

CHAUNCEY GOODRICH PARKER.

"In January, 1888, I attended the Harvard Law School, and continued there till June, 1888, when I took the Law School examinations and received the degree of A.M. In June, 1888, I also was admitted to the New Jersey Bar as attorney-at-law. I returned to my home in Newark after leaving the Law School, and in the fall entered into partnership with Sherrard Depue, Esq., son of Judge David A. Depue, of the New Jersey Supreme Court. We opened offices at No. 802 Broad street, Newark, and have continued in partnership for the practice of law ever since. In March, 1890, I was appointed attorney for the Board of Health of Newark. In the summer of 1889 I spent two months in Europe travelling. Last June I was admitted as counsellor-at-law at the New Jersey Bar, and have been appointed a Master in Chancery and Commissioner of the Supreme Court. I have lived continuously in Newark, except in summer, and am unmarried." Is a member of the Essex and Jeffersonian Clubs.

GEORGE FAIRBANKS PARTRIDGE.

"I taught in Boston in a private school where boys are fitted for Harvard till the summer of 1890. After four years there, I spent the next year in the Boys' English High School in Boston. In the fall of 1891 I took charge of the High School in Great Barrington, Mass."

JAMES KIRKE PAULDING.

"I went abroad in the summer of 1888, and spent until the spring of 1890 studying in the universities of Leipsic and Berlin. In the winter of 1891 I returned to New York and took up my residence at 146 Forsyth street, a tenement-house, where I have been studying social problems and devoting my leisure time to the work of the Neighborhood Guild, an institution organized to give expression to the social life of the people and to satisfy its higher needs."

HORATIO PERRY PEIRSON.

"Have been in business in Boston." Is a member of the University Club of Boston; continues to reside in Salem.

CHARLES ALBERT PETERSON.

Taught electrical engineering for one year at the University of Pennsylvania. Was last seen in Boston looking for something to engage in.

REUBEN PETERSON.

"I completed the three years' course at the Harvard Medical School in June, 1888, my service as house surgeon in the Free Hospital for Women ending in June, 1888. I served for a year as medical house officer in the Boston City Hospital. The summer of 1889 was spent in the various hospitals of New York City. In March, 1890, after completing a four months' service as house officer in the Boston Lying-in Hospital, I located in Grand Rapids, Mich., where I have since resided. For a year and a half I was superintendent of St. Mark's Hospital of this city, and am now visiting gynæcologist to the same institution. I was married March 6, 1890, to Josephine Davis, of Elk Rapids, Mich. We have one child, a son, born January 9, 1891." Member of the Peninsular Club.

JOHN SANBORN PHILLIPS.

Is still engaged in his old occupation of editor of several magazines. Is married and has two children.

PALMER ELLIS PRESBREY.

Is assistant cashier of the National Bank of Redemption, Boston, and an active member of the Longwood Cricket Club. Is a member of the Colonial Club of Cambridge, and of the Boston Athletic Association.

FREDERIC EUGENE PUFFER.

"I have been engaged in only one occupation since 1888, — that of paving streets. I was first employed as a cashier by the Warren-Schurf Co., and later as a superintendent. My occupation takes me to a good many different cities, and I generally remain several months in each."

SHERIDAN PITT READ.

In 1889 Read went to Canton, China, where he was established as one of the managers of the famous firm of Russell & Co. While there Read was appointed acting vice-consul for Sweden and Norway. (It is customary in the far East to appoint a "taipan" (manager) of one of the prominent firms to act in the vice-consular capacity for a power too sparsely represented to require a full consul.) In this official capacity Read won deserved encomiums from the consul-general for the skill and ability in which, in several instances, he fulfilled the duties of consul. One of these was his skilful manipulation to get funds to and the safe convoy of Mr. Gustav Oberg, a Swedish gentleman of family who, travelling through China without a passport, found himself far in the interior, robbed of his money, and in great danger. Through Mr. Read's skill and able diplomacy Mr. Oberg reached Canton in safety.

Mr. Oberg has published a graphic account of this adventure, in which Read's name figures prominently.

In 1891, when the firm of Russell & Co. ceased to exist, Read made the tour of the world.

In 1892 Read went again to Europe to study and travel. Since his return to America he has devoted himself to the study of political economy, and to literary pursuits. An article in the December number of the "American Journal of Politics," called "A Plea for a Diplomatic Career," attests his ability and brilliancy in this line.

Mrs. Read, his wife, has also, over the nom de plume of Sewall Read, already established considerable fame as a littérateur, — her Oriental tale in the February "Cosmopolitan" of this year (1893), called "Toki Murata," having received much favorable comment. She is also the author of numerous clever poems, principally on Oriental life.

In 1888 Read lost his only son, Francis Gardner Noyes. He has two children, — Hannah Elizabeth Noyes, born in New York, April 6, 1888, and Dorothy Quincy Hancock, named for her great-great-grandaunt, wife of Gov. John Hancock, born at Boulogne-sur-Mer, France, June 3, 1892.

On Dec. 4, 1889, Read was elected a companion of the first class by right of inheritance of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, New York Commandery.

WATERS DEWEES ROBERTS.

"My life has been entirely given to the work of my calling; it has been without excitement and without incident." Was graduated from the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, in 1888, and has been one of the assistant rectors at Trinity Church, Boston. Is a member of the University Club.

CHARLES PROSSER ROBINSON.

"I have been actively engaged in the practice of law ever since I received the degree of LL.B. from the Harvard Law School. It may interest Harvard men to know that we have organized a Harvard Club in the city of Pittsburg, which is a howling success."

EDWARD DRAKE ROE, Jr.

"I have been registered as a graduate student in Harvard since 1888. In the latter half of 1890 I took charge of mathematics during the illness of Prof. B. O. Peirce, and at the end of the year was called to Boston University as Instructor in Mathematics. This position I held for two years. In May, 1892, I resigned it in order to accept the position of Associate Professor of Mathematics in Oberlin College, to which I was called by a vote of the Faculty, May 9. In 1889–1890 I was one of the founders of the Harvard Graduate Club, being its first secretary, and for two years subsequently, vice-president, and chairman of the executive committee. I joined the New York Society Sons of the Revolution, but have been transferred to Massachusetts. I am a member of the official board of the Epworth Methodist Episcopal Church of Cambridge, and am greatly interested in the church, whose handsome edifice is rising next to Hastings Hall. March 15, 1890, I was married at Cambridge, to Harriet Adelaide Bridge Gourley. I have two children, Mary Eva Gourley Roe, adopted March 18, 1890, and Edward Drake Roe, 3d, born March 21, 1892." Has been unfortunate in the subsequent death of his boy.

GEORGE WILLIAM ROLFE.

"Few events of general interest have taken place in my life during the past four years. One great epoch of my existence was marked by my marriage in the early part of 1888. In January, 1889, I severed my connection with the Charles Pope Glucose Co., as their analytical and consulting chemist, spending the larger part of the time till September in study. From September, 1889, till July, 1890, I resided in Brookline, Mass., holding the position of sub-master in the Brookline High School. December, 1890, till June, 1891, I spent at Central 'Parque Alto,' a sugar-house some twenty-five miles from Cienfuegos, Cuba, as chemist for Fowler & Co. This last crop-season of December, 1891, to June, 1892, I have held a similar position with E. Atkins & Co., of Boston, on the sugar estate of 'Soledad,' about twenty miles from Cienfuegos. My plans for the immediate future are unsettled, but I expect to continue to practise my profession as an analytical and consulting chemist, going whither my business takes me, but when circumstances permit, residing in Boston or vicinity."

THEOPHILUS HUNTINGTON ROOT.

"After completing my junior year at the Union Theological Seminary, New York, in the fall of 1888, I entered the middle class of the Yale Divinity School, where I graduated in May, 1890. The following year I studied at Cambridge as a post-graduate student in the Harvard Divinity School for the Williams Fellowship. During the past year I have been preaching and studying, residing part of the time at Cambridge. Have recently accepted a positon as tutor in New Testament subjects at the University of Chicago. My summers have been spent as follows: 1888, in charge of Presbyterian parishes at Little Egrimont and Rileyville, Pa.; 1889, in charge of Congregational Church at Princeton, Me.; 1890, supplied pulpit at Haydenville. Mass., several Sundays; 1891, at Marblehead Neck, Mass."

WILLIAM NOBLE ROUNDY.

"In answer to your questions, I say: First, I am here at Louisville. Have been here nearly a month; will remain here a week or two longer. Second, What I am, — to quote, or rather misquote, Shakespeare, — no man 'seems to know,' although, according to current rumor hereabouts, I am either an actor, or a poet, or some other strange and uncanny specimen of humanity. Third, as to how I am, I may say that at present I am in a cheerful state of mind, and (the Lord willing) I hope to stay so. As regards information, I haven't much to say. Early in the spring of 1888 I was engaged on a piece of literary work in addition to to business. In summer I was wholly engaged in mercantile matters. As a result of too much money-making, I suppose, I was taken with typhoid fever September 4, and was in bed about five weeks. During the winter, lack of fresh air and too much exercise in an endeavor to get it, gave me a backset, so that in June, 1889, I was worse than ever in general health. Went to Saratoga Springs on July 29, 1889. Stayed there and at Mt. McGregor until October 12. Made a trip through Berkshire Hills; stopped a week at Williamstown. Was at New York a couple of weeks. Went up to Boston, stopping at Fall River; was two weeks at Tremont House. November, met George Francis Train, whom I found to be an intensely interesting man. Not at all crazy, in the ordinary sense, but a man of extremely high nervous organization, with a mind filled with all sorts of dreams and fancies which have never found expression. A man of very shrewd and keen insight into many things, but a man whose ambitions have caused a bitterness within him which literally eats his heart away. The simple and natural way in which he entertains children is, however, the greatest test of the essential sanity of the man. At the Tremont House I met also the late William J. Florence, the actor, a very simple, modest gentleman. In November went to Philadelphia, where I stayed three weeks. From there made journey to Charleston, S.C., to visit Wagener, '85 (who was then Assistant Professor of Modern Languages in Charleston University). I stopped at Washington, Baltimore, Norfolk, Va., Edinton, N.C., Washington, N.C. (the former home of H. C. DeMille, the playwright), at Greenville, N.C., and at Wilmington, N.C. After two weeks at Charleston, I started north, stopping at Columbia, S.C., and Spartansburg, S.C. At Spartansburg, S.C., in January, 1890, I read, posted on the court-house, an official proclamation by the mayor, calling a public meeting of the citizens in the town-hall to show 'their respect and honor to the memory of their lamented President of the Confederate States, Jefferson Davis(who had died a week or so previous). The whole proclamation was filled with fulsome eulogy of Jeff. Davis as a hero and the lamented martyr of a great cause. As a sample, also, of the spirit of treason in the South is the inscription on the Soldiers' Monument which stands in front of the State House at Columbia, S.C. From Spartansburg went to Ashville, N.C., stopping at Henderson, the highest plateau of the Great Smoky Mountains, — a beautiful climate, well-cleared country, and fairly prosperous. Here, in a little hotel, I found a Boston lady, — an old maid, — who had spent every winter there for the last fifteen years; and to while away the dulness of provincial Southern life, she read her books and magazines, drank tea copiously, and ate as sparingly, and looked almost as blue and cold as if she were back in her old Massachusetts home. At Ashville, N.C., I spent two weeks. Investigated the scenery and people as well as I could. Ashville is one of the garden spots of America, to my mind. It is situated in the midst of mountains and clouds that are like a great panorama of heaven and earth all in one. For beauty and grandeur of scenery combined, they could not well be surpassed. In time to come, I think Ashville will be perhaps the one greatest American resort, and the sheer love of beauty will make it so. After leaving Ashville, I journeyed toward Knoxville, stopping at Hot Springs, N.C., — a little nest in the mountains, situated on the divide between North Carolina and Tennessee. A place of babbling brooks and swaying pine-trees and wondrous clouds. Full of all sorts of human interest, too. Before getting to Hot Springs I stopped at Marshall, the county seat, — a town which has the reputation of being the only town in North Carolina (perhaps in all America) whose growth is fixed. 'Tis situated along a mountain river on a strip of bottom land and hemmed in between the hills and the stream. It can't stretch out because there is no place to stretch to, and it takes pretty good care to keep all the town lots it now owns. Here I stayed with an old man who came into these mountains way back in the days when fur trading with the Indians was a profitable business. A strange thing it seemed to me. For there are no mountains I know of so bereft of game and hiding-places for game, as those North Carolina mountains. The illicit distiller is the only game that has succeeded in hiding in them, and even his lease of life is very precarious. From Hot Springs I went to Knoxville. Had a good visit with Ed. Sanford, who was then just beginning to get involved in law. Thence to Cincinnati, and home by March 6, 1890. Since then I have made two short journeys. One to Duxbury, Mass., in September 1, 1890, stopping at Pittsburgh, Pa., to see Litchfield, then newly established as an M.D. I found him working like a beaver, as happy as a lark, and as successful as the fabled Yankee always is, and of necessity must be. At New York I saw Harry Simpson and John Phillips, who were then occupying quarters together on Irving place. My second trip of late was to Fortress Monroe, last spring. I left Chicago March 8. Stopped at Huntington, W. Va., where I attended court trial of two young boys accused by a neighbor (who had a grudge against them) of firing dynamite cartridges on Christmas night, in the little town of Guyandotte. The neighbor maintained that the boys tried to blow his house up. The testimony brought out the fact that the nearest explosion was at least two hundred feet from his house, and that, although the entire town was somewhat shaken up by the shock, the plaintiff's house was no more shaken up than any of the rest. From Huntington went to Clifton Forge, Va., a romantic and magnificent spot. Thence over the Blue Ridge to Charlottesville, Va. Visited the home of Thomas Jefferson, Monticello; an ideal home for an aristocrat, situated two miles from town on the top of a small mountain, and surrounded by noble old trees. From Charlottesville went to Fortress Monroe. After a stay of five days started back home. Stopped at Richmond; thence to Danville, through Salisbury to Morgantown, N.C., one of the oldest towns in the State. Thence to Asheville, Hot Springs, Morristown, Tenn., and after a chat with Ed. Sanford, and his wife and baby, to Chicago. Last spring and summer spent most of the time at Lake Bluff, Ill., a place which contains more and larger oak-trees than any other single spot along Lake Michigan from the Indiana to the Wisconsin State line, and which also is the highest point of land on the Illinois frontage to Lake Michigan. This was a preparation, so to speak, for literary work, which I have been doing ever since October 4. And henceforth, I may say, that, for better or for worse, you may reckon me a follower of the muses, — nothing more, nothing less. And if, in the years to come, any of the boys shall ask why, with all the splendor of the great West at my elbow, I too have not become rich in the accumulation of gold dollars, I hope to be able to answer in good earnest that I have not had the time. As a last word, I pray that you will excuse this unpardonable loquacity, but I promise here and now not to repeat the offence, even though at some far day in the future I shall again receive a peremptory challenge to 'stand and deliver!' Nay, I shall then do after the manner of the trembling soldiers in the modern war dramas, — give the countersign in a very loud tone and pass on."

EDWARD TERRY SANFORD.

"After January 1, 1888, I continued my course at the Harvard Law School, graduating in 1889, and obtained the degree A.M. in addition to that of LL.B. After graduating, I at once returned to my home in Knoxville, Tenn., and during the summer of 1889 was employed as an assistant in the office of the general solicitor of the East Tennessee, Virginia, & Georgia Railway Company, at Knoxville. On August 1, 1889, I formed a law partnership with Judge George Andrews and Col. J. M. Thornburgh, under the firm name of Andrews, Thornburgh, & Sanford. Judge Andrews was killed in a railway accident, twenty-two days thereafter. The firm of Thornburgh & Sanford continued until September 1, 1890, when Mr. C. E. Lucky became a member of the firm, the style of which was changed to Thornburgh, Lucky, & Sanford. Nineteen days thereafter, Colonel Thornburgh died, leaving the present firm of Lucky & Sanford, of which I am now a member. We are attorneys for the Marietta & North Georgia Railway Company, and engaged also in general practice, making, however, a specialty of corporation law. I married, on January 6, 1891, Lutie Mallory Woodruff, daughter of Capt. W. W. Woodruff, of Knoxville. We have one daughter, Dorothy Sanford, born December 5, 1891. We have recently completed the building of a house, No. 166 Hill Street, Knoxville, and but a few days since moved into our home.

CHARLES AUSTIN SAWIN.

Is still engaged in business in Boston, and lives, as formerly, in Cambridge.

ARTHUR BROWN SAWYER.

"From January 1, 1888, until July 1, 1890, I had charge of Boston store of Phelps & Lombard's morocco business. At that time I took the New England agency for glazed kid and morocco for W. J. McClary, of Wilmington, Del., all of whose goods I sell now on commission in the United States and Canada. On April 1, 1892, I also became treasurer of the Sawyer Crystal Blue Company." Is a member of the Athletic and Algonquin clubs of Boston.

WILLIAM MUNROE SEAVEY.

"In September, 1888, was appointed assistant agent of the Oriental Powder Mills, at the Buffalo agency. In September, 1889, entered first class of Harvard Law School. Was admitted to the Suffolk Bar in August, 1891. I expect to graduate from the Law School next June, and shall practise probably in Boston or New York." Is a member of the University Club of Boston.

ARTHUR WESLEY SIM.

"A large part of my time since leaving the Law School, which I entered on leaving college, has been spent in an attempt to recover my health. In the spring of 1890 I made a visit to my old friend and classmate, Mr. Allan D. Cole. I found him in the midst of the pleasantest surroundings, enjoying great prosperity, and entirely recovered in health, which was quite poor at the time of his graduation. My visit to him in the beautiful 'blue grass' region was the pleasantest incident in my life, and will be remembered with great pleasure. I was greatly benefited by my trip South, and since my return have been practising law at Pepperell, Mass., and since January 1, 1892, at Boston, at 53 Devonshire Street."

ROBERT FIELDS SIMES.

"Law student at Cambridge until June, 1888. Student in office of Lewis S. Dabney, Esq., until July, 1889, and practising law in Boston since then." Is a member of the Puritan and Athletic clubs of Boston.

JOHN SIMPKINS.

Has taken a broad interest in public affairs. Twice represented the Cape District in the Massachusetts State Senate, 1891 and 1892. Was one of the founders of, and is now the president of, the Republican Club of Massachusetts. Was a Harrison and Reid elector in the 13th congressional district. Is on one of the visiting committees appointed by the Harvard Overseers. Is a member of the Union League of New York, the Somerset of Boston, and other clubs.

HARRY WILLIAMS SIMPSON.

"I have spent the entire period since January 1, 1888, in the city of New York, practising law. Nothing whatever has happened to me during that time." Was married at New York City on January 5, 1892, to Constance Doria Jones, daughter of John and Doria Jones.

ALFRED PERCIVAL SMITH.

"January 1, 1888, found me yet a student-at-law in the office of Messrs. Wayne MacVeagh and George Tucker Bispham, of Philadelphia, Pa., whence I graduated, and at same time obtained the degree of LL.B. from the University of Pennsylvania, in June of same year. For my first year and a half at the bar I was content to have office room only with an older lawyer; but since 1890 have had my own office. I was married in the latter part of the winter of 1890. I have no children; am a life member of Historical Society of Pennsylvania, member of Academy of Political and Social Science, Citizens' Republican Association (for reforms within the lines of the party), the Law Academy of Philadelphia, and of course take a strong interest in the Harvard Club of Philadelphia. Nothing very eventful has happened to me, but I have settled down to hard work as a young but ambitious member of our Philadelphia Bar."

EDWARD IRVING SMITH.

"Since January 1, 1888, I have finished a three years' course at Harvard Law School, graduating with the class of 1889. In the fall of that year I moved to Waltham, and opened a law office there in partnership with Charles M. Ludden, of my class in the Law School. A few months later I began practising in Boston, at 244 Washington Street, where I remained until March, 1890, when I formed a connection with the firm of Perkins & Lyman, 82 Devonshire Street, Boston. This connection was severed September 1, 1891, and since that time I have been in partnership with Mr. Ludden, under the firm name of Smith & Ludden, 5 Pemberton Square, Boston. Nothing of marked interest has happened to me during the period mentioned. My time, since leaving the Law School, has been fully taken up in the practice of my profession." Was married at Lincoln, Mass., October 29, 1890, to Lucia Grosvenor Campbell, daughter of John and Ellen Campbell. A son, Maurice Campbell Smith, was born November 22, 1891.

WILLIAM CHRISTOPHER SMITH.

Practises law at 53 State Street, Boston, and lives at Melrose, Mass. Was married October 31, 1889, at Chelsea, Mass., to Florence, daughter of William R. and Bethiah C. Ilsley.

WILLIAM WHARTON SMITH.*

It is again our sad duty to announce to the class the death of one of its members.

William Wharton Smith, of Philadelphia, was drowned at Newport, R.I., on the third day of July, 1892.

He came of sterling English Quaker stock, his ancestors having been "Friends" for many generations. The first of his father's family to settle in this country did so in the middle of the seventeenth century, while some of his mother's ancestors came over with William Penn on the "Welcome," on one of her later trips.

Will was born in Germantown in August, 1861. When old enough he did as all good Quakers do — he went to the Friend's school, where he stayed until he was seventeen, finishing preparation for college at Phillips' Andover.

Coming to Harvard a little older than many of us, he was perhaps the better prepared on that account. In his four years he did good work, preferring the general subjects, that should be part of every liberal education, to those which might be regarded as more closely bearing upon his future profession, the law. He had a lively interest in athletics, although, I believe, he did not take a very active part in them. In due time he became a member of the Pudding and of various other college societies. His summers were always spent at Newport, practically in his boat, for he was passionately fond of the water.

After leaving college, he graduated LL.B. from the University of Pennsylvania, in 1888, winning the Sharswood prize for the best essay by a member of the senior class.

He was at once admitted to the bar, and had begun to taste professional success at the time of his early death.

The details of the accident are as follows: Being on from Philadelphia for the "Fourth," he determined to spend one day of his brief vacation in sailing around the island on which Newport stands, in his cat-boat, with his younger brother and a friend. The day was a bad one, with a very stiff breeze, and a heavy sea running; but the writer, who saw Will start that morning, had been out with him in worse blows, and knowing from experience his skill and judgment and the seaworthiness of his boat, gave the weather hardly a thought. Just how the accident occurred is not known, but in a tide-rip, off Brenton's reef, the boat was swamped, and, cumbered with their heavy oilers, Will and his friend were not able to reach the shore, although his brother managed to do so after a hard fight with the waves, nearly a mile distant.

While being by right of inheritance a man of strong, resolute character, Will possessed, to those who had once penetrated his reserve, a capacity of good fellowship, and a sympathetic sincerity that endeared him to all who knew him well; while to the highest ideals he united a faculty for sturdy, faithful work, which, but for his untimely death, would surely in time have enabled him to rise very high in his profession.

M. S.

The following extracts, the first from a letter, and the second from an informal address at the meeting of the Law Academy of Philadelphia, held in memory of our deceased classmate, its president, give some idea of the high esteem and friendliness in which he was held by the men of his native city and his fellows at the bar:

"Bill Smith was a dear friend of mine — my dearest friend. I do not suppose that I shall ever feel quite the same again as I did before that fatal July day. I have missed him terribly, and one of the saddest visits I ever paid was the one which Mrs. P—— and I made a little while ago upon Bill's parents and sisters — when we saw how terribly he was missed there. He was a fellow that developed so gradually and grew up so slowly that I feel as if those who knew him only when he was younger missed a great deal that became conspicuous in his character and personality only in the last four or five years of his life. He was dearly loved by a large circle of friends and acquaintances, and on all sides there were heartfelt expressions of sorrow at his death."

"You, sir, have referred to his singular modesty and simplicity of character. He despised display and pretension of every kind; indeed, he was often too content to seem to know less than he did, lest he should be thought to know more, — a rare trait, and an admirable one, even in our voluble and aggressive profession.

"But there are other characteristics of his that I refer to, not in praise of him, — that he would not have wished, — but because it seems to me that in a gathering of his comrades and friends like this, it is fitting that we, and especially those of us who stand upon the threshold of an active career, should not miss the message and the inspiration which the quenching of his brief life brings to us.

"He was a pure man; no one could breathe the same atmosphere without realizing the entire cleanliness of his mind and heart, his pleasure in the high things of life, his detestation of the low. He was manly, devoted to healthful outdoor life and all athletic exercises, and, better still, of a moral courage that, often distrustful of its own powers, supported him in right doing, however difficult. He was faithful. I think no duty, as has been said, was ever shirked by him; to the best of his abilities he rendered a full account of what was confided to him.

"Old-fashioned virtues these, but their presence or absence in a life makes all the difference between success and failure, in time and in eternity.

"Of his work as a lawyer, you, his companions here in the Law Academy, can better speak. That his abilities were recognized is fully attested by your election of him to the honorable offices of Prothonotary and of President. His industry and his conscientious discharge of duty were already beginning to make their mark in the actualities of his profession.

"Of his usefulness in other fields I can speak from personal experience. The poor boys of the St. Mary's Street Carpenter Shop have lost in him a friend who never failed them, and other efforts for good in that degraded district will sadly miss his constant helpfulness. In the Forestry Association, in the City Park's Association, I have known him well, and there his labors and his interest showed that public spirit which this community so much needs, and can so ill spare.

"How much of promise for good remains unfulfilled by his sudden death! For this we must mourn. For himself we dare not mourn. 'There was no sadness of farewell,' and that 'one dear call' that came to him so suddenly found him ready 'when he put out to sea.'"

MALCOLM STORER.

"Till February, 1890, I served as surgical house officer at the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston; then I went abroad and spent fifteen months studying at Vienna and Dublin, returning to this country in July, 1891. Have not yet gone over to the silent majority; i. e., am still unmarried." Is an M.D. Harvard of 1889. Belongs to the Puritan Club, Boston.

JAMES JACKSON STORROW, Jr.

"July 1, 1888, almost immediately after graduating from the Harvard Law School, I began to practise law. October 1, 1888, I became a member of the law firm of Fish, Richardson, & Storrow, of which firm I am still a member. October 1, 1891, I married Helen Osborne, daughter of the late David M. Osborne, of Auburn, N.Y., and I am now living at 29 Hereford Street, Boston."

CHARLES AUGUSTUS STRONG.

"After teaching logic and psychology at Cornell for nearly two years, I was married and went abroad, studying a semester each in Paris, Berlin, and Freiburg in Baden. On returning to this country, I was appointed Docent at Clark University, but was obliged to drop work in the middle of the year on account of ill health. Since then I have resided in New York City, but hope next fall to be able to undertake the duties of an associate professorship in psychology at the new University of Chicago." Was married March 29, 1889, to Bessie Rockefeller, daughter of John D. and Laura S. Rockefeller, of New York.

Born at Ashtabula, Ohio, October 5, 1861; died at Ashtabula, January 5, 1887. See Report II., p. 49.

EBEN SUTTON.

"In 1888 I was superintendent of the North Andover Mills, and in 1890, on my father's death, I became treasurer, which position I still hold. In 1891 my brother and I bought the Great Falls Woolen Company, which we are now running on a fine grade of dress-goods. Most of the time for the past four years I have been in Boston and vicinity, with the exception of a trip last fall to San Francisco and the Northwest." Was married November 17, 1891, at Baltimore, Md., to Anna Boyd McAtee, daughter of Walter B. and Rachel M. McAtee. Is a member of the Union, University Club, and other clubs of Boston.

HENRY KIRKLAND SWINSCOE.

"I have been constantly at work in improving the machinery in the C. W. C. Co. to get cheaper production, and have, I must say, been successful, having increased the product of the two departments under my especial supervision one hundred per cent. I have had one patent issued, two allowed, and have three now in the office. I have had, in addition to my regular work in the mechanical department, the greater part of the work on the company's patents to look after. For recreation, I try to act; sing when my friends are especially indulgent; read much, remember little." Married August 11, 1891, to Mary Waldron Stickney, daughter of Josiah and Elizabeth M. Stickney, of Jamaica Plain.

ALFRED WILLIAM TAUSSIG.

"Left St. Louis in August, 1889, for Duluth, where I formed a partnership with my brother in the real-estate and loan business, under firm name of L. J. Taussig & Co., in which business I have since been engaged. Life otherwise uneventful."

HOWARD AUGUSTUS TAYLOR.

"On January 1, 1888, having been admitted to the New York City Bar, in the previous autumn I became a clerk in the law office of Hornblower & Byrne, in New York. On January 1, 1890, I became a junior partner in the firm. On May 1, 1891, the firm name was changed to Hornblower, Byrne, & Taylor, office at 45 William Street. For the last two years I have spent my summer vacations travelling in Europe. Before that I passed my vacations playing tennis."

FREDERICK SPAULDING TAYLOR.

"I studied architecture until 1889, since then I have been in a stockbroker's office in Boston."

EDWARD CLAFLIN THAYER.

"Since leaving college I have been continuously in the wholesale boot and shoe business in New York City. Until September 1, 1891, I was in the employ of Messrs. Aaron Claflin & Co. This firm, one of the oldest in the business, was dissolved on the death of the senior partner, Aaron Claflin, and a new firm, under the name of Claflin, Thayer, & Co., of which the writer is a member, was formed to carry on the business. My life for the past six years has been uneventful, though not unpleasant."

ERNEST LAWRENCE THAYER.

"My life has been perfectly uneventful." Is engaged in the manufacture of woollens at Worcester.

JOHN ELIOT THAYER.

"I've changed but little since 1889. My hair has turned much grayer and my chest has fallen many inches; otherwise I am the same old hayseed as of yore. The class will please take notice that I am doing my duty for my country." That is, he is the father of three healthy children, is an aide on Governor Russell's staff, and is much interested in the New England Horse Breeders' Association, of which he is the president.

WILLIAM SYDNEY THAYER.

"From January to July, 1888, I was a student in the Harvard Medical School. From August 1, 1888, to August 1, 1889, I was a house physician at the Massachusetts General Hospital. The year from September 1, 1889, to September 1, 1890, I spent studying in Berlin and Vienna, taking a month's vacation in England. I was one of the secretaries of the section for General Pathology and Pathological Anatomy at the Pesth International Medical Congress held in Berlin in August, 1890. I practised medicine for several weeks in September and October, 1890, at 84 Charles street, Boston, and thence went to Baltimore as an assistant physician at the Johns Hopkins Hospital. Since September 1, 1891, I have been resident physician at the same institution." Is a member of the University Club of Baltimore.

EDWARD JAMES TILTON.

"In June, 1888, I left the Harvard Medical School intending to return in the fall; circumstances, however, prevented, and not until the present year have I been able to return and complete the course." Was married at Concord, Mass., to Mary A. Wheeler, June 29, 1889.

WILLIAM ROPES TRASK.

"In June, 1888, I graduated from the Harvard Law School and was admitted to the Suffolk Bar of Massachusetts. I spent one year in the law office of the firm of Shattuck & Munroe, and since then have been practising law in Boston in partnership with Robert F. Simes."

GEORGE SIDNEY TYLOR.*

George Sidney Tylor, the son of Albert Orso and Mary Murdock Tylor, was born at Avondale, a suburb of Cincinnati, Ohio, on August 18, 1863. He entered the public schools at the age of five years, and graduated in course from the Woodward High School in the class of '80. During his last year at Woodward, he prepared himself for admission to the Harvard Law School, and in June passed the examinations; only two weeks, however, before the beginning of the fall term he decided to take the academic course, and for the next nine months he studied under Mr. Joseph E. White, '77, and, anticipating some work of the freshman year, planned to enter the sophomore class; he did not attempt this, but passed the regular freshman examinations. At this time and during his college course Tylor had given up all ideas of studying law, planning to pursue a mercantile life, but after graduation, in 1885, he returned to Cincinnati and entered the Cincinnati Law School. He received the degree of LL.B. in 1886, and immediately began to practise his profession. Soon after entering upon what he supposed was to be his life-work, he had a very severe illness, from the effects of which he never recovered. Accompanied by his mother he went to North Carolina, Georgia, Colorado, and California, and later to the Sandwich Islands, never to return. He died of consumption at Honolulu, April 12, 1891.

Tylor's life was an uneventful one, yet all his classmates and friends feel thankful that they were fortunate enough to know him. As one writes: "We valued him not so much for what he has done as for what he was: his high, clear desire, his ready sympathy, his conversation full of suggestion and stimulus, his singularly sweet and even disposition, his great capacity for friendship and affection, — these qualities made for him a place in the hearts of his friends all his own, and one that never again can quite be filled. We all loved him." His four years at Harvard were spent quietly. He was a member of the Lacrosse Association, playing on the second "Twelve" (he writes in his class life, "There were only two"), of the H. B. C., H. A. A., and Everett Athenæum. The more active side of college life, however, had less attractions for him than the companionship of his friends; he found the best of life in conversation, in nature, and in his love of books. What Tylor might have accomplished had his life been spared is of course unknown; those of us who knew him best have confidence that his life would have continued true and noble, and could not have meant more to us had he lived to attain the highest professional success.

H. W. W.

At a meeting of our class held in Boston, June 28, 1891, the following resolutions were adopted:

That whereas we have learned with deep sorrow of the recent death of our classmate, George Sidney Tylor, who was known to many of us as a warm friend, a genial and vivacious companion, and a diligent student, and whose many brilliant qualities promised a life of great usefulness,

Resolved, that we hereby express our sense of the great loss that we have met, and extend our sympathy to his family and friends.

THEOPHILUS H. ROOT,
HIRAM W. WADSWORTH,
ARTHUR L. ALLEN,

For the Class of '85.

FRANK LOUIS VAN CLEEF.

"Three years after graduation I remained as a student of Greek, Latin, and Sanskrit at Harvard, and received in 1888 the appointment as Rogers Fellow. The two following years were spent at the University of Bonn, at Bonn, Germany, where in 1890 (August 2) I received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. The following year (August, 1890–August, 1891) I spent as private tutor in Cambridge, from which place I received a call to fill the newly established professorship of Greek at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis., where I am now pleasantly situated."

HIRAM WARREN WADSWORTH.

"My life during the past four years has been uneventful and of little interest to the class. My time has been devoted entirely to my family and my business." Is blessed with three children.

HANCKE FREDERICK WAGENER.

Is teaching at Charleston College, Charleston, S.C.

ANDREW HENSHAW WARD, Jr.

"After finishing my fourth year as a teacher, in 1889, I entered the Harvard Law School, and shall finish my course there this coming June. I hope to practise in Boston."

SAMUEL SMART WATSON.

"I have been engaged in the practice of law at Kansas City, Mo., since January 1, 1888. On the date mentioned I was a member of the firm of Waters and Watson. In November, 1890, the firm was dissolved by mutual consent, and I have continued the practice alone at the old stand. Nothing especial has happened to me. I have had neither very good nor very bad fortune, but have succeeded fairly well, all in all. I am not married."

ARTHUR GORDON WEBSTER.

"At graduation in 1885 I was appointed instructor in mathematics at Harvard for one year. At the expiration of that time I received the appointment to a Parker Fellowship in Physics (which I held for three years), and proceeded to Europe to begin studies at the University of Berlin. In the summer of 1886 I travelled in England, France, and Switzerland, and taking up residence in Berlin in the fall, entered the Physical Laboratory under the directorship of Professor von Helmholtz. In the spring of 1887 I proceeded to Paris, and for about two months attended lectures at the Faculté des Sciences and the Collège de France, afterwards returning to Berlin for the summer semester. The summer vacation I passed in travelling in Switzerland. The next spring vacation I devoted to Italy, and in the summer of 1888 left Berlin for Copenhagen and Stockholm, attending lectures for some two months at the University of Stockholm. Returning to Berlin, I made a flying trip to America, returning at once to Berlin. In the summer of 1889 I visited the Paris Exposition, and sailed again for this country in September. On October 8 I was married to Elizabeth Munroe Townsend, daughter of the late Capt. Robert Townsend, U.S.N., at Syracuse, N.Y. We spent the next year in Berlin, where, on August 2, 1890, I attained the degree of Doctor of Philosophy and Master of Arts. The examiners were, in Theoretical Physics, Von Helmholtz; Experimental Physics, Kundt; Mathematics, Fuchs; Philosophy, Zeller. I had then passed eight semesters in Berlin.

"We returned to Syracuse, N.Y., where our daughter, Harriet Eleanor, was born, August 22. In October I was appointed Docent in Mathematical Physics at the Clark University in Worcester, Mass., where I have since resided. Last summer was spent partly in the Adirondacks, after which I made a short trip to Europe, to attend the meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science at Cardiff (where I read a paper) and the Electrical Exhibition and Congress at Frankfurt-am-Main. I have just been appointed Assistant Professor of Mathematical Physics at Clark University.

ALBION OTIS WETHERBEE.

Is engaged in tutoring in New York City.

CHARLES CHAPIN WHEELWRIGHT.

Is still in the wool business, being a wool broker at 344 Atlantic avenue, Boston. Is also connected with the Rowe's Wharf Corporation. His son, Josiah Wheelwright, 2d, was born at Cohasset, Mass., May 5, 1888.

FRANCIS WINTHROP WHITE.

"Since the publication of our second Class Report, little or nothing of interest to others than myself has happened to me. My occupation has been the same, and generally my life has kept to the even tenor of its way. With the exception of the summer of 1889, which I spent in Montreal, Canada, and in New York State, my residence has been almost continuously in Cincinnati, Ohio. I have had one serious sickness — typhoid fever — which for six months in the summer and autumn of 1890 disturbed my usual business and social occupations."

McDONALD ELLIS WHITE.

"My life since 1887 has been uneventful, and has been spent entirely in Boston. I have been in active business all the time, except the last six months of 1888. Part of the summer of 1888 was spent in Canada and Northern New York and Vermont. My chief interest apart from my business has been in the First Corps of Cadets, M.V.M." Is with Houghton, Mifflin, & Co., publishers, Boston. Is a member of the Puritan, St. Botolph, University, and other clubs.

JULIAN LINCOLN WHITESIDE.

"November 1, 1889, resigned my position with the Lowell Water Works, and became manager of a tannery at Olean, N.Y.

Was married December 31, 1889, at Lowell, Mass., to Mary Blanche Hubbard. Have one child, Julia Beatrice Whiteside, born October 2, 1891."

EDSON LEONE WHITNEY.

"From 1887 to 1890 I was in the Graduate Department at Harvard. I received the degree of A.M. in 1888, and Ph.D. in 1890. During the first two years I acted as Dr. Channing's assistant in History I. During the last year I held a Townsend scholarship. In April, 1890, I read a paper before the N.E. Historic-Genealogical Society on "Education in the Colony of South Carolina." My Ph.D. was obtained in American history, the Colonial period, the first degree given by Harvard for that period. My time since January, 1888, has been spent in study, private tutoring, and teaching. This past year I have been teaching here in Wisner, Neb., with success. I expect to leave here very soon for a better position. November 15, 1890, I was married in Quincy, Mass., to Florence Louise Carter. Frederic Carter Whitney will celebrate his first birthday August 22, 1892. He was born in Rochester, N.Y., where I was last winter. Last winter I was elected a member of the Nebraska State Historical Society, and was a charter member of the Nebraska Congregational History Society." Is now Professor at the Norwich University, Northfield, Vt., and is a member of the American Economic Association.

CHARLES ALEXANDER WHITTEMORE.

"The study and practice of law in Boston have been my occupation for the period to be covered by this sketch. In July, 1891, I was elected one of the examining counsel of the Conveyancers' Title Insurance Company of Boston. In December, 1888, I was married to Evelyn C. Bullard, of Cambridge, and on August 28, 1890, a daughter, Elsie, was born to us."

HENRY MORLAND WILLIAMS.

"I have continued to practise my profession since the date of the last report, and incidentally have filled two positions in connection with the Police Court of Brookline. December 8, 1891, I was married to Eleanore Thaxter Dodd, daughter of the late John A. Dodd, of Boston. My longest professional trips have led me no farther than Maine, New Hampshire, and Northern New York, and my chief recreation has been rowing and canoeing as a member of the Union Boat Club."

GEORGE LANE WINLOCK.

"Since October 13, 1885, I have been with the Old Colony Railroad and Steamboat Companies, Boston, Mass." Was married October 29, 1891, at Cambridge, Mass., to Sara Carmalt Mulford, daughter of the late Rev. Elisha Mulford. Is a member of the Colonial Club of Cambridge.

SAMUEL ELLSWORTH WINSLOW.

"Have been continually in business in Worcester, Mass." Was married at Charlestown, Mass., April 17, 1889, to Bertha Lucenia Russell, and has two children, Dorothy and Russell, both born at Leicester, Mass., in January 16, 1890, and February 8, 1891, respectively. Aide-de-camp, with rank of colonel, on staff of His Excellency J. Q. A. Brackett, Governor of Massachusetts in 1890. Member Republican City Committee, in 1889, and chairman in 1890, 1891, 1892. Member of First Executive Committee of Republican Club of Massachusetts, in 1891, from which he resigned.

WILLIAM WARREN WINSLOW.

"Understanding the purpose of these reports to be to glorify the class by shedding lustre upon ourselves as members of the class, I present this record of my exploits:

"I was admitted to the bar in December, 1888, and at once opened an office in Punxsutawney, Pa., my native town, and a flourishing industrial community. Here I have been ever since, making the law my regular occupation. I have succeeded slightly beyond my expectations. For two years I served as member of the Examining Committee of the Jefferson County Bar. I am attorney for the Citizens' Bank of Punxsutawney, and am solicitor for three building and loan associations, whose business is quite large. Have dabbled in local politics, serving for six years as member of the School Board, and as delegate to several county conventions of the Republican party. I was President of the Senatorial Conference of the Thirty-seventh District in 1888, and Secretary of the Congressional Conference of the Twenty-first District in 1890. I am a Director of the First National Bank of Punxsutawney, Secretary of the Punxsutawney Electric Light and Power Company, and for four years have been President of the School Board. The conglomerate foreign population of a great coal-mining centre contribute a goodly amount of criminal business to the aspiring attorney, and in this line I have tried two murder cases and pretty much every other every-day offence against the laws. Altogether, my various occupations keep me busy, and I take few vacations. May 30, 1892, admitted to practice in the Pennsylvania Supreme Court."

EGERTON LEIGH WINTHROP, Jr.

Lawyer at 48 Wall street, New York City.

EDWARD FRANKLIN WOODS.

"In May, 1888, associated myself with an old-established fire-insurance concern. In the following November became managing partner, under name of Crane & Woods. January 15, 1891, married and settled at West Newton. Have one child, a son, Edward Hutchins Woods, born April 30, 1892."

JAMES REED YOCOM.

"Graduated from the Medical School, and was married in June, 1888; studied medicine for a year in London, England, and Berlin, Germany; returned to New York in summer of 1889, and came to Tacoma, Wash., where I am now practising medicine."

EDWARD BLAKE YOUNG.

"With the exception of two short visits to Cambridge, my time has been continuously occupied with reading law and office work, which, however, have not kept me from various social amusements. When the ice is out of the river, a daily hard row in a single shell gives me exercise enough to keep me in excellent health. Nothing worthy of note has happened to me during the past four years, except that on January 1, 1892, I was admitted a member of the firm of Young & Lightner."

TEMPORARY MEMBERS.

EVERETT VERGNIES ABBOT.

"Immediately after graduation I entered the Harvard Law School, receiving my degree in 1889. That summer I spent abroad with my friend, Walter Naumburg, who was graduated from college in the same year.

"On my return I came immediately to New York for the practice of my profession. I was called to the bar in December, 1890, and am now established here permanently, I suppose. My success here has not been brilliant, but it seems, on the whole, satisfactory. I shall never be the leader of the bar in this city, but I hope to do some things which others may judge worth doing." In 1889 published in "Harvard Law Review" a prize essay, "Police Power and the Right to Compensation."

CHARLES LEE BARNES.

PRINCE LUCIEN CAMPBELL.

"Since returning from College, in 1886, I have been permanently located in Monmouth, Ore., my old home, engaged in teaching in the State Normal School. As given in the last Class Report, I was married in 1887; our first child, a boy, was born May 15, 1889, but died at the age of three months, September 1, 1889. Our second child, a girl, was born February 28, 1891, and is still living. I suffered the greatest of all misfortunes in the death of my wife, March 20, 1891. In June of 1890 I was elected President of the State Normal School, which position I still hold. About the same time, I was also elected vice-president and manager of our local bank, which still remains under my direction. Although my duties have been many and varied, they have been, in the main, pleasant, and I do not find myself the worse off for a good deal of hard work."

GOUVERNEUR MORRIS CARNOCHAN.

Has continued to be in banking business, first with Kidder, Peabody, & Co., and their successors, in New York, Baring, Magoun, & Co., and now with Hoskier, Livingstone, & Co. While with the former house his residence was, for a portion of the time, in London, England, where he was a member of the Century Club. The rest of his time has been spent in New York. Was married on October 30, 1888, at Riverdale-on-Hudson, to Matilda Grosvenor Goodrich, daughter of Frederic and Charlotte M. Goodrich. They have sons, of whom the second and third are living, John Murray, born at Edinburgh, Scotland, Frederic Grosvenor and G. M., Jr., born at Riverdale. Is a member of the St. Nicholas, Calumet, Manhattan, and Country clubs of New York, of various political organizations, etc.

ARTHUR DELORAINE COREY*

An original member of the class of '85, died at his home in Malden, August 17, 1891. He was born in Malden, Mass., April 13, 1866, and, after fitting for college at the high school of that city, entered Harvard with the class of '85, at the age of fifteen, passing the examinations with honors. In his freshman year he was the recipient of a detur, and at the close of the sophomore year was awarded second year highest honors in classics. Severe illness at the beginning of the junior year, and again in his senior year, obliged him, although with keenest regrets, to fall back one year, and he graduated with the class of 1886, receiving the degree

A.B., summa cum laude, and taking final honors in classics. While a senior he was awarded a Bowdoin prize for an essay upon "The Dionysiac Theatre." At graduation he received honorable mention in four subjects, — Greek, Latin, French, and English Composition, these being indicative of the trend of his college studies. At the end of one year's post-graduate work, devoted mainly to the classics, he received the degree A.M. in 1887. He became a member of Phi Beta Kappa in his senior year, and was a charter member and the secretary of the Classical Club.

In 1887 he went abroad, settling down for study, after a period of travel, at the University of Berlin, and after nearly four years of work in that institution in classics and archæology under some of the best and most noted scholars, was clothed with the rank and privileges of a Doctor of Philosophy by the Berlin faculty, on the fourteenth day of March, 1891. His doctor's dissertation, written in Latin, was entitled "De Amazonum Antiquissimis Figuris," an archæological study, for the completion of which he was obliged to spend considerable time at the British Museum in London, the Louvre in Paris, and the museums in Germany, Holland, Belgium, and Italy. Of his dissertation the reviewer in the "Wochenschrift für klassische Philologie," of September 23, 1891, says: "The collection of archæological material is very useful and deserves the thanks of scholars."

He returned to America in May of 1891, and, while enjoying the reunion with his parents, whose only child he was, and with friends, was stricken down after the lapse of only three short months, while apparently in the prime of health, and died after an illness of only four days.

Dr. Corey was characterized by an earnestness and conscientiousness that manifested itself in everything he undertook. As a student he won the admiration and respect of his teachers, a fact to which all have testified to his sorrowing friends. Though specially devoted to classical studies, he did not fail to find time for and interest in the welfare of those about him, forgetting self in helping others; and, wherever he was, many, both young and old, friends and strangers, have him to thank for bright moments in their lives. In Berlin the condition of the downcast element in society, particularly that of the Jews, attracted his attention, and his influence among them was productive of the best results. And at his funeral services loving hearts bore testimony of his kind work among the Armenians. Dr. Corey held himself a faith that triumphed over all the discouragements of life and never wavered. At Cambridge he was active in the work of the Christian Brethren, and his early interest in such matters never left him. Firmness and stability of principle are the qualities that distinguished his every act, and of him, as of very few, it may be said, that, in spite of the multitudinous temptations in European society, his adherence to his American principles and views never for a moment wavered. This steadiness of character marked the last moments of life, for, though he recognized clearly that death was at hand, he forgot not a single plan he had laid, but had a thought for all the good works he had begun, and made provision for their maintenance and continuance, thus leaving behind him many enduring memorials of his life. Such firmness of character naturally made him the most faithful of friends, and in the supreme hour his thoughts went out to those who were dear to him, and he left a kind message of consolation and remembrance for each.

He had qualified himself for his life-work as a teacher and as a citizen in a manner possible only to a few. No life of the same extent could have been productive of more good or given brighter promises for the future. And yet, while we may not understand why one so well fitted for the accomplishment of a grand and noble work was cut off on the threshold of life, for our consolation is it that the forces and influences that he set in operation will never perish, but will go on and on forever. We, his classmates, will long feel the void that his death has caused in each heart.

GARDINER FRYE.*

Was born at Boston, Mass., December 2, 1862. His father, Joseph Francklyn Frye, died during his boyhood. His mother's name was Emily Jane Gardiner. He spent his boyhood in Boston, and was prepared for college at the Boston Latin School and by a private tutor. He remained at Harvard only a few months, and never became much identified with the class, as he had continued to reside at his home in Boston, and had, therefore, but small opportunity for forming college acquaintances. After leaving college his life was somewhat unsettled, but in 1885 he began the study of medicine at the Harvard Medical School. Two years were occupied in study there, and he then completed his medical education at the University of Vermont, and received the degree of M.D. from that institution. But his health was far from good, and he spent most of the few remaining years of his life in travel. For some months he was in the far Southwest in search of better health, but on his way home last summer he died at sea, of consumption, on August 9, just before the steamer "Columbia," from Colon, reached New York.

"Clerking in South California National Bank of Los Angeles, California," of which bank he is a director.

He was married at Los Angeles, October 30, 1889, to Flora A. Baldwin, daughter of O. W. and Margery P. Baldwin, and has a daughter, Maria Louise, born August 20, 1890.

WILLIAM JOHN HOPKINS.

"My life since January, 1888, has not been an eventful one. About a year and a half was spent in the laboratory of the American Bell Telephone Company, where I was engaged in original investigation and other purely scientific work. Leaving there in the summer of 1889, I went to the Thomson-Houston Electric Company, and have since been engaged in railway engineering work of all descriptions. I was necessarily active in the movement to introduce the electric railway system throughout the country, and this work compelled pretty constant travel on my part for some time.

"Although I have had very little time to devote to social pleasures or duties, I have found Boston more and more attractive, and it is with some regret that I now give it up as a place of residence. I am, at this writing, on the point of assuming new duties at the head of the Department of Physics in the Drexel Institute of Philadelphia, where I expect to find the work particularly congenial."

Is a member of the Union, University, and Athletic clubs of Chicago.

SIDNEY WALKER MILLER.

"Was employed by the city of Pasadena, Cal., as Assistant City Engineer, up to September 1, 1888, when I was taken sick with a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism, and was confined to my bed until the following May. It was the winter of 1890 before I was able to reassume my duties, and was only able to work one year, when I had a second attack of the same trouble, which kept me abed for nearly eight months. However, my convalescence is now almost complete. In July, 1890, I invented an automatic siphon, for which I have obtained patents in the countries of North America and Europe."

located. In August, 1891, I accepted the secretaryship of the Arcadia Gulf Coast and Lakeland R.R. Co., of Florida, and have recently returned from an extended trip through that State. My family has been increased by two boys and a girl. I have become a member of Union Lodge (Masonic), Dorchester, Mass., and also of the old Dorchester Club, Dorchester, Mass."

FERDINAND REIS, Jr.

"Nothing has happened to me worth relating. Almost died in winter of 1890." Is in business in San Francisco.

Was born October 25, 1860, in New York City. His father, James Bardwell Richards, a born philanthropist, devoted his life to the establishment of schools for imbecile children, while his father, in turn, had died while engaged in missionary work in Ceylon. His mother, Mary Williams (Symmes) Richards, was of good old Plymouth stock, a woman of indefatigable spirit, and a great worker in anti-slavery times.

Warner was the youngest of three children, and never strong. With him the body was always a clog; and though remarkably intelligent as a child, it seems as if the organic heart trouble with which he was afflicted had developed a characteristic moderateness in thought and action, which was a death-blow to the ambitious schemes of his parents. He had hoped to make his life-work that of a physician, and prepared himself for Harvard at the Boston Latin School. He entered college regularly with the class of Eighty-five, and took his part in the Cambridge life of freshman year, making many friends. But when at the end of that time he realized how much of a strain it was for his father to pay his bills, he gave it all up, and went at once into office work in New York City.

Always cheerful and hopeful, he never bemoaned his fate, and worked with faithfulness wherever he was placed, being at the time of his death an honored clerk in the office of Messrs. G. W. Sheldon & Co., custom-house brokers and forwarding agents of New York. Having lost his mother at the age of eleven, spending most of his later years in a New York boarding-house, and having neither money nor influence to give him business backing, especially taking into consideration his lack of physical force, his uprightness, his purity, and the honor in which he was held both in his business and friendly relations were qualities in which his friends take just pride.

His death was sudden, being preceded by only three days of pneumonia. He did not realize his condition, and the end came without pain, as he was surrounded by his friends, on October 16, 1889. He is buried in Greenwood, L.I., with his mother and father.

* JOHN RODOLPH URNER.

Was born in Clinton, Miss., August 21, 1861, his father at that time being President of Mississippi College. He prepared for college at Williston Seminary, East Hampton, Mass. His scholarship there was so good that Dr. Keep reported him as facile princeps in his class. In 1881 he entered the freshman class of Harvard College. Owing to trouble with his eyes he was obliged to leave his class before the year was ended. Having been unable to study for some time, rather than drop back into a lower class at Harvard, he entered Princeton College in 1882 and graduated there.

After graduating he entered Columbia College Law School, where he graduated in law in 1886.

After being connected with a law firm in New York City a few years, he and another young lawyer, in the spring of 1890, took a trip out West with a view of possibly locating there. They got as far as Spokane Falls, Wash., where they both found themselves dangerously sick from accidental exposure on the journey. His friend's sickness developed into typhoid fever.

Mr. Urner, badly broken down in health, was urged by the physicians to leave that sickly locality immediately and try to save himself, leaving to their care his sick and dying friend. But he thought that duty required him to stay and take the chances. After the death of his friend, he took the remains back to the relatives in New York, and then went to his own home in Pennsylvania, where he lingered three months and then died, on October 30, 1890, aged 29 years 2 months and 9 days, — a martyr to duty.

[From the "Pottstown Ledger."]

The funeral of John R. Urner, son of Isaac N. Urner, LL.D., of Parkerford, Pa., took place yesterday [November 4, 1890], and a number of mourning friends and relatives gathered around the coffin to pay their last respects to their friend. The services at the house consisted of a prayer by Rev. J. P. Hetric, pastor of the Coventry Brethren Church, followed by a very touching and pathetic sermon by Rev. J. B. Soule, pastor of the Parkerford Baptist Church, followed by a very hearty and feeling prayer by Rev. L. K. Evans, pastor of the Trinity Reformed Church of Pottstown. The funeral cortège then proceeded to the place of interment, the Coventry Brethren Burying-ground in North Coventry, where all that was mortal of their late friend was laid at rest by six of his classmates at Princeton of the class of '84, and of the Columbia College Law School of the class of '86, of which deceased was a member, strewing in the open grave garlands of natural flowers. On the casket, which was a handsome cloth-covered one, was a heavy silver plate, inscribed as follows: John R. Urner, born in Clinton, Miss., August 21, 1861; died at Parkerford, Pa., October 30, 1890, aged 29 years 2 months and 9 days."

I. N. U.

ARTHUR ALLEN WATERMAN.

"I have been in business constantly in Cambridge and Boston." A son, John Fuller Waterman, was born at Arlington, on June 3, 1889.

Born at Roxbury, Mass., March 7, 1864. Drowned at Brookline, August 3, 1884.

See Report I., p. 97.

WALTER ATHERTON.

"During the above time I have lived in Boston, occupied by my profession, with the exception of the summer of 1889, which I spent in travelling."

Is with Fehmer and Page, Architects, 87 Milk St., Boston.

ELLERTON LODGE DORR, JR.,

Was married June 25, 1891, at Sorrento, Me., to Elizabeth Gwynn Hancock, and a daughter, Elizabeth, was born at Memphis, Tenn., April 11, 1892. For the first two years of the period was a cotton buyer at Memphis for his father's firm in Boston. Is now a cotton planter at Oakhurst Plantation, Miss., spending a portion of his time at Memphis.

ALBERT SIDNEY JOHNSON JENNINGS.

"Three months in San José during the land boom were fairly pleasantly spent. In March, 1888, I went to Anaconda, Mont. As assistant engineer in charge of construction, nine months were busily spent overlooking the erection of the smelting-works. I afterwards went to Butte City, still in the employ of the Anaconda Co., as their underground engineer. While there I received an offer to come to South Africa, as general manager of the Willow mine, which offer I accepted. I spent one year at the mines, when I resigned my position. I spent six months in and around Johannesburg, investigating silver mines for the firm of Wehrner, Beit, & Co. The offer of assistant general manager of the DeBeers Consolidated, at Kimberley, was made me, and I accepted, and have been here ever since."

BENJAMIN BOWDITCH THAYER.

"Was connected with the Anaconda Mining Co. until July, 1889, when I accepted a position with the Bi-Metallic Mining Co., of Granite, and have been associated with them ever since. Have made several mining trips through the Northwest and British Columbia. Was married on January 29, 1890, to Marie Renouard, of St. Louis. Have one child, Benj. B., Jr. Was one of the organizers of the University Club of Montana, which at present is somewhat inactive; but has a membership of 180, if I remember correctly. My present address is Granite, Deer Lodge County, Mont."

CLASS HISTORY 1889–1892.

One event in the class history of Eighty-five stands out pre-eminent as a red-lettered mile-stone on our travels through the period covered by this report, — the second triennial dinner held at the Parker House, on June 23, 1891. One action on the part of the class promises to bear fruit, in the future, — the vote on Commencement Day, 1890, authorizing the preparation of a Class Album.

The last Commencement Day meeting of the class, in Hollis 4, where we had been accustomed to assemble annually since graduation, was held there on June 26, 1889. The business meeting was called to order at 12 o'clock by the Secretary, who presided. After a statement concerning the second Class Report, it was voted that the Chair appoint an auditor to audit the class accounts to appear in the forthcoming report. The Chair appointed Robert S. Gorham. It was also voted to approve the scheme to publish the third Class Report in 1892, the fourth in 1895, and others at intervals of five years thereafter. The meeting then adjourned. About forty-five men were present during the day, of whom fourteen went to the alumni dinner in the afternoon.

July 18, 1889, the second Class Report made its appearance.

Commencement Day, June 25, 1890, was celebrated by the gathering of the class at Holworthy 9, a new headquarters, which met with favor and has since been retained. The Secretary presided at the business meeting, which was called to order at 12.30. The attention of those present was called by Mr. Fisk to an album or portfolio which had just been published by Thurston, for the class of Ninety. Mr. Thurston was present by request and gave the figures of the probable cost of such an album for Eighty-five. After some discussion it was voted (1) that the Chair appoint a committee of three to consider the feasibility of the proposed album, and to send circulars to the class to afford them an opportunity to subscribe; (2) that the price be fixed at three dollars, any profit therefrom to be made over to the class fund. The following committee was appointed: Fisk (chairman), Storrow, Williams. At this meeting it was also voted that the class continue to provide punch at Commencement "forever." Also that the Chair appoint an auditor to audit the accounts of the class fund before the next triennial dinner. The chair appointed R. S. Gorham. After a statement about the class fund the meeting adjourned.

The second triennial dinner was held at the Parker House, Boston, Tuesday evening, June 23, 1891. The dinner was laid in rooms one, two, and three thrown en suite, and one long table accommodated all but a couple of late-comers. The men present, to the number of eighty-three, filed in from the reception room headed by Storrow and J. E. Thayer; and Baldwin, Chairman of the Class Committee, presided. After the many courses had been disposed of and the company had been mellowed into a state of complacency, the presiding officer called upon a number of men to entertain the company with informal remarks. Nutter cast his thoughts into the form of several verses apropos the second triennial, personal, reminiscent, finally alluding to the recent losses from the circle of Eighty-five's chosen band. The last three verses are given by permission, at the solicitation of many who were present:

In June long past within the yard we sat at careless ease,
No grass for us so green as that beneath the Cambridge trees;
No glimpse of western river for us so broad and free,
As where the Charles, our river, flows onward to the sea.

The playful words forgotten then, still echo in the heart,
The bonds there knit together, not even Time can part;
And in remembrance of those days, we all of us are one;
They who sit among us here, and they who now are gone.

Then with love that springs within us from the memories of the past,
With the hope that lives within us while Eighty-five shall last,
In the gladness of her spring-time, let us pledge her man with man,
Until Eighty-five has ended, as Eighty-five began!

Sam Winslow gave a very clear and instructive review of the athletic situation as it then existed, from the standpoint of an insider. J. L. Fisk spoke for the Class Album, E. L. Thayer on the wrongs of the workingman, Gorham for the lawyers, Halbert in response to "Our Former Secretary," Root for the ministry, Cushing for such bachelors as remain in Eighty-five, Holland for Chicago, Webster for "Sister Universities," O. S. Howard for California, and the Secretary for the class of Eighty-five. Old Glee Club men led the singing, and telegrams were read from French and the class baby, and from Goodale, Paulding, and Storer in New York City. The latter read as follows:

CLASS OF EIGHTY-FIVE, PARKER HOUSE, BOSTON:

The voice of three crying from the wilderness, long life to Eighty-five.

GOODALE, PAULDING, STORER.

Shafter Howard arrived direct from California at about 11 P.M., and it was not until nearly twelve that Fair Harvard and Auld Lang Syne brought this, our best dinner, to a close. During the evening the chairman, upon motion, appointed Wadsworth, Root, and Allen a committee to prepare suitable resolutions upon the death of George Sydney Tylor; and Nutter, McD. E. White, and Williams, a committee to prepare suitable resolutions upon the death of Marland Cogswell Hobbs.

Commencement Day at Cambridge, the day following, the class met informally at Holworthy 9, our present headquarters. No business was transacted, but about forty men were present, and over a dozen went to the alumni dinner at Memorial in the afternoon.

June 29th was Commencement Day in 1892, and the usual spread was had at Holworthy 9. The business meeting was called at 12.30 by the Secretary. A report was made through Fisk by the Album Committee on the state of that enterprise, and it was voted to include Instructor Preble's picture among the Faculty, so that the collection should be complete. The following committee was appointed to draft suitable resolutions upon the death of Arthur L. Allen: McInnes, Newhall, and Wadsworth. The attention of the class was called to the appeal for funds to develop the Soldier's Field and also to the proposed "Harvard Graduates' Magazine," and a small sum was subscribed to help defray the initiatory expenses of starting the latter. About thirty men were present and eleven went to the dinner.

RESIDENCE.

The following table shows the changes in residence between 1885 and 1888, and again between 1888 and 1892. The latter columns contain names of several men who have received degrees as of 1885, but who were not included in the list of 1885, as they had not then graduated. The several deaths account for the decrease in the last column.

CLASS AND COLLEGE FUNDS.

[Note. — Owing to unforeseen difficulties by the treasurer in preparing this statement, the appearance of the class report has been delayed for several months.]

I herewith submit my report of the class and college funds. There seems to be nothing which calls for especial comment except to say that at the time the class purchased one share in the Clinton Gas Company, that company had been paying dividends at the rate of eight per cent. per annum for many years, but owing to the fact that the company bought the electric-light plant of the city and incurred large expenses in the erection of a new electric-light station, it has temporarily suspended the payment of dividends. As the electric-light station is now built and running, it is expected that the payment of dividends will be resumed shortly. During this cessation of dividends one of our classmates, under whose advice this investment was made, has insisted upon making up to the class the usual rate of dividend, amounting, as already stated, to eight per cent. annually upon the par value of the stock (the price at which the share was bought by the class). These payments have accordingly been credited under the head of dividends. In case the company does not resume the payment of dividends before the expiration of the present year, the same classmate is ready to purchase the share at the price paid by the class. I am sorry to have to note this suspension of dividends on the part of one of our investments, but it will be seen that the net result to the class has been not at all unsatisfactory, as the class has been receiving a decidedly high rate of interest upon the $500 invested, and will suffer no impairment of its principal.
